It is not necessary to consider what the position would be if the original agreement were ended simply as a means of defeating the appellants' rights; for, no such case is urged, and the question does not arise. That the contract of the 2nd December 1912 cannot be treated as an extension of the original contract, but is a completely new bargain which in itself terminated the original contract, is plain; for the terms of the two contracts differ in many important respects, and, most notably, in the amounts of commission to be paid. Whether or no this latter contract followed a termination by three months' notice of the earlier contract pursuant to the provisions which it contained, is immaterial. The provision as to notice was a means by which either party to the contract might bring it to a close against the will of the other. It was always competent to them both by agreement to end it when they pleased; and whether it was ended by one means or the other, no breach has been committed of the respondent's duties under his contract with the appellants, since such contract never expressly created, nor impliedly involved, any obligation not to agree with Messrs. Sassoon to a new contract of brokerage, if and when it was thought fit.

With regard to the action for monies due under the contract of 8th June 1911, the only question that arises is as to whether the respondent is entitled to make a reduction in respect of losses arising from the incomplete contracts existing when the arrangement with the appellants came to an end. The learned trial Judge thought that he was not; but in this view their Lordships cannot concur.

SURESH CHANDRA v. JOGENDRA NATH.

The accounts showed that certain losses always arose, due to the failure of customers, who were introduced, to accept delivery and pay for the goods they had bought.

It is urged on behalf of the appellants that, had their services been continued, their losses might have been minimised, owing to their personal relations with the customers. This is, indeed, a reasonable possibility, but the appellants have failed to show that the difference between the amounts which the respondent seeks to deduct under this head are so materially out of proportion to the average loss that was sustained during their period of agency as to make a substantial difference in the figures, and, in these circumstances, their Lordships see no reason to interfere with the judgment of the High Court, who take the view that actual losses should be deducted.

The final question relates to a claim with regard to business done under a verbal contract made between the appellants and the respondent's firm for brokerage on goods bought by the respondent's firm from Messrs. Sassoon & Co. direct and from their buyers. The learned trial Judge in directing an account of the sum due, in addition to a figure no longer disputed of 8 per cent. brokerage, adds also an account in respect of profits. This formed no part of his original judgment, but was added in the decree. There is no analysis by the learned trial Judge of the evidence which led him to include this claim. The High Court on appeal thought it was insufficient for the purpose, and with that view their Lordships agree. The appellants in their evidence in chief do not in the first instance make a claim to embrace these sums. They stated: "Juggumal told us that we would get the same commission for selling these goods;" that is, the same commission as they were receiving under the original contract, and in this the payment by commission is distinct from payment by a share of profits. They added that they were claiming a share of the profits in respect of these accounts, but they certainly did not say in examination-in-chief that there was any agreement that those profits should be paid.

There is no sufficient explanation of how the claim for profits became included in the original decree, and their Lordships think that the High Court were right in rejecting it. For these reasons they think that this appeal should fail, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that it should be dismissed with costs.

The owner of an easement cannot, by altering his dominant tenement, increase his right.

Where, therefore, the defendant the owner of a hut having eaves 8 feet from the ground hanging over plaintiff's land replaced it by a two-storied building having a cornice 22 feet from the ground with the result that accumulated water came down with greater force:

Held, that an additional burden had been imposed upon the plaintiff's land. [p. 856, col. 2.]

The owner of a dominant tenement who claims an easement must prove that by an alteration in the dominant tenement no additional burden has been thrown on the servient tenement and he is not entitled in second appeal to ask that expert evidence be taken. [p 856, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the following decision of Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 20th June, 1919.

NEWBOULD, J.—The plaintiff and the defendant are two brothers. They were formerly joint owners of certain property and as a result of a partition, amongst other property a piece of land on which there was a privy fell to the lot of the plaintiff and the piece of land immediately to the north fell to the lot of the defendant. The plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for a mandatory injunction on the defendant to pull down a cornice and string-course put up by the defendant so as to overhang the plaintiff's land and for a declaration that the defendant had no right to make such projections. The defendant's case is that, before the partition, there were two tiled huts on his piece of land, and that the eaves of one or both of those huts touched the north wall of the plaintiff's privy and that on severance he had an easement or quasi-easement which gave him the right to a structure projecting in equal extent over the plaintiff's land, and that this justifies the erection of the cornice and the string-course. The suit was dismissed by the Special Munsif of 24-Pergannahs but decreed by the Subordinate Judge of the Third Court in that district. The learned Subordinate Judge did not decide the question whether there was originally a right of easement arising from the existence of the tiled huts; but, admitting, for the sake of argument, that the defendant had acquired such a right, he held that that did not give him the right to construct the cornice and the string-course to which the plaintiff objected. The learned Subordinate Judge based his decision on three different grounds. The first was that as the dominant tenement, the tiled hut, had been completely destroyed by the defendant, the defendant could not claim the easement in respect of this new building which he might have enjoyed in respect of his old tiled hut. He next held that as the cornice and the string-course were mere ornamental works, no right of easement could be claimed for these projections, citing the case of Nritta Kumari Dassi v. Puddomoni Bewah (1) in support of this finding. Lastly, he held that the cornice and the string-course could not be allowed to remain as they were an additional burden upon the servient tenement. I have some doubt as to the correctness of the learned Subordinate Judge's decision on the first two of those grounds but on the third ground, his decision is conclusive in second appeal. The question whether an additional burden has been thrown by the new building in excess of the inconvenience caused by the existence of the tiled huts, appears to me to be a pure question of fact which cannot be questioned in second appeal, nor can it be said that the finding is unreasonable. The tiled huts, as pointed out, were about 8 feet high from the ground; the string-course is 12 feet and the cornice 22 feet above the ground. From these facts the learned Subordinate Judge drew a further inference of fact that the water would fall with greater force from the greater height. It is contended that, as more water would be falling from the roof of the tiled huts than would fall from the cornice and the string-course, there could have been no greater inconvenience from the projection of the new building than there had been from that of the old. But these are questions into which we cannot go in second appeal; consequently, though there are authorities to support the contention of the appellant that the pulling down a house with an intention to erect a new one does not cause loss of the servitude, that is conditional on there being no increase of the burden. Also it seems to me open to question whether the decision in the case of Nritta Kumar Dassi v. Puddomoni Bewah (1), is applicable to the facts of the present case. There it was held that there could be no prescriptive right to a projection which had been erected merely for the purpose of ornamentation. But here, at any rate, in this Court, the defendant-appellant does not base his claim on a right obtained by prescription but as a quasi easement resulting from a severance. If the right to erect a building projecting over the plaintiff's land continued, I do not think that the defendant would lose that right by making an ornamental projection. But, taking the appellant's case at its best, he cannot establish a right to erect a new building on the site of the old which throws an increased burden on the plaintiff's land.

On this ground the decision of the lower Appellate Court must be upheld and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit instituted by the respondent for a mandatory injunction to pull down a cornice and string-course put up by him so as to overhang the plaintiff's land, upon declaration that he had no right to make such projections.

The Courts below have found that the defendant had a hut on the disputed land in respect of which he had an easement. The only question in controversy is, whether the right of easement exists in respect of the two-storied building by which the hut has been recently replaced.

Now, it is well settled that no man can impose a new or increased restriction or burden on his neighbour by his own act, and for this reason an owner of an easement cannot, by altering his dominant tenement, increase his right. This principle is well illustrated by the decision in Harvey v. Walters (2). In that case, the house in respect of which an easement was enjoyed was pulled down and was replaced by a new house three feet higher than the original one. The Court held that, in these circumstances, as there was no addition to the burden, the easement remained unaffected. The plaintiff there was the owner of certain premises the eaves of which projected over adjoining land of the defendants and had become entitled by length of user to have the rainwater drop from such eaves on to the defendant's land. The plaintiff in rebuilding his premises carried the wall abutting on defendant's land to a slightly greater height than before, and raised the height of the eaves from the ground to the same extent. As there was no evidence that a greater burden was thrown on the servient tenement by the alteration, it was ruled that the easement was not thereby destroyed, and the plaintiff was entitled to the right of eavesdrop from the premises as altered. This decision followed the earlier case of Thomas v. Thomas (3).

In the case before us, the Subordinate Judge has carefully gone into the question and has come to the conclusion that the burden has been increased. The Subordinate Judge found that the defendant had encroached on the superincumbent portion of the plaintiff's land by making the cornice and the string-course at two places, one at a distance of 12 feet and the other of 22 feet from the ground, while the eaves of the tiled hut stood at a distance of only 8 feet from the ground and hung over the plaintiff's land along one line. He further pointed out that the accumulated water trickles down from the cornice from a height of 22 feet and consequently with greater force than the water which formerly came down from a height of eight feet only. On these facts, the Subordinate Judge came to a finding that the present cornice has to a certain extent created additional burden on the plaintiff's land. Mr. Justice Newbould has correctly held that this finding of fact must be accepted for the purpose of the second appeal.

The appellant has finally argued that expert evidence should have been taken. There is no force in this contention. The onus was upon the appellant, who claimed the easement, to prove that when the hut was replaced by a two-storied building, no additional burden was imposed upon the servient tenement; yet he never offered to give expert evidence on the subject. We are accordingly of opinion that the decree made by Mr. Justice Newbould must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

GOPALA KRISHNA NAICKER v. VISVANATHA IYER.

—Execution of decree—Mortgage by judgment-debtor after sale—Right of mortgagee to apply to set aside sale.

A person who acquires a mortgage interest in property after a Court sale is not a person entitled to apply under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the sale, that rule is limited to those persons who acquire an interest before the sale. [p. 859, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act II of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated 23rd September 1918, of the District Court, Tanjore, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 34 of 1918, preferred against the order, dated the 6th March 1918, of the Court of the District Munsif, Mannargudi, in Execution Appeal No. 1 of 1918, in Execution Petition No. 557 of 1917, in Original Suit No. 31 of 1917.

This petition came on for heaing on the 11th of February 1920 before Justice Sir Abdur Rahim, Kr., who made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The petitioner is a usufructuary mortgagee of a certain property which was sold by Court in execution of a decree against the mortgagor. The petitioner's mortgage was executed after the date of the sale, and he applied under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, to have the sale set aside on depositing the purchase-money. One of his contentions was that he acted merely as an agent of the judgment-debtor in making the application. That contention was rejected by the learned District Judge; and, if I were finally disposing of this petition, I should be inclined to agree with that finding. But two other important questions of law have been raised on which there is a conflict of authorities; and as, on going through the decisions on the subject, I am inclined to doubt the correctness of some of the rulings of this Court, I feel compelled to send the case to the learned Chief Justice so that it may be heard either by a Division Bench or by such other Bench as he might like to constitute for the purpose.

The first question is, whether a person obtaining a mortgage after an auction sale from the judgment debtor is competent to act under Order XXI, rule 89. Mr. Justice Benson and Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar in Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Sankaran Nair (1) held that such a person is entitled to make an application for setting aside the sale on depositing the purchase-money. That view has found acceptance by another Division Bench consisting of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Spencer in Subbarayudu v. Lakshminarasamma (2). These rulings are more or less in accordance with the decision of Appaya Shetti v. Kunhati Beari (3) which was one under section 310A of the old Code. On the other hand, this view of the law is opposed to that of the Bombay High Court in Pandurang Laxman v. Govinda Dada (4), of the Patna High Court in Dhanwanti Kuer v. Sheo Shankar Lal (5) and the Allahabad High Court in Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (6), though I am not in agreement with the learned Judges of these latter High Court on the question whether the judgment-debtor who has purported to sell the property after the auction sale is competent to make the application. On that point I am inclined to agree with the view of the Bombay High Court that he is so competent.

With all due deference to the learned Judges of this Court who were parties to the decisions above referred to, it seems to me that, to hold that a person who obtains a conveyance from the judgment-debtor after his property has been sold in execution of a decree can apply under Order XXI, rule 89, is to go against the plain language of the Legislature which says: "where immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree, any person, either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court....." To my mind it is clear that the date of the sale is the determining point of time with reference to which the Court has got to decide as to the person who is entitled by virtue of his title to or interest in the property to apply under rule 89, Order XXI. The plain intention of the Legislature so far as it can be divined by giving to the words used their ordinary meaning is to enable the person who was either the owner of the property or had an interest in the property at the date of the sale to have the sale set aside on conforming to the provisions of the Code. The reasoning in Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Sankaran Nair (1) and in the other Madras decisions proceeds, in the first place, on the assumption that even after the auction sale, the judgment-debtor remains the owner of the property and can pass the title to other persons before the sale becomes absolute, in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 65 of the Code says that the property sold in execution of a decree vests in the purchaser from the time when the property is sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute, and that is what is emphatically pointed out by the Privy Council in Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (7). Again the learned Judges in Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Sankaran Nair (1) seem to have been greatly influenced by what they considered to be the policy of the section. They seem to be of the opinion that the object of the Legislature is to give every chance to persons having an interest in the property to set aside the sale and, therefore, felt themselves justified in placing a wide construction on the words of the section. Even granting that the Legislature intended that the rule should be somewhat liberally construed, it seems to me somewhat anamolous to say that where the property is sold in execution of a decree and a person has bought that property and paid the purchase-money as required by law, the interest acquired by such a purchaser could be set at naught, not only in the interest of the person who was the owner of the property or had acquired an interest in it at the time of the sale but also of persons who purported to buy the property or to acquire an interest in the property after the auction sale. That the Legislature should think of giving preference to the latter as against the purchaser at Court auction is not, in my opinion, in consonance with one's ideas of what is right and just. The judgment-debtor's interest having been sold, any alienee from him after the sale must be more or less in the position of a mere speculator and it seems difficult to presume any intention on the part of the Legislature to favour such a speculator. On the other hand, the case of the owner of the property or of the person to whom it had been transferred at the date of the sale stands on a very different footing, and the Legislature might well have thought that such persons should be given a further chance of saving the property, if possible. It may be that in order to raise the money under rule 89 of Order XXI he might sometimes have to enter into arrangements with third persons, but it is a different thing to say that such third persons were sought to be benefitted by the rule.

As regards the question of construction pure and simple, I really do not follow the reasoning in Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Sankaran Nair (1) by which the words "by virtue of a title acquired before such a sale" are sought to be limited to the words "holding an interest therein" and not as extending also to the words "owning such property." The other question that arises upon the petition is whether this is a matter which comes under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The question is answered in the affirmative in Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Sankaran Nair (1) and also in Dhanwanti Kuer v. Sheo Shankar Lal (5). But in Subbarayudu v. Lakshminarasamma (2), above alluded to, Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar expressly dissents from that view, while Mr. Justice Spencer does not express any opinion either way. On this point I am inclined to agree with Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar. The argument in support of the petition is that when a Court is moved by means of an application under Order XXI, rule 89, it has jurisdiction to act, only if moved by persons fulfilling a certain description. This seems to me to involve a fallacy. If the Court has jurisdiction to deal with the matter, the question whether a certain person can move the Court for an order in his favour will be one of law depending on the construction of the rule. One might as well say that a Court which had jurisdictions to entertain a suit with respect to certain properties acted without jurisdiction in entertaining the suit at the instance of the party who is ultimately found to have no title to or interest in the property. This petition must be submitted to the learned Chief Justice for disposal. I would not have expressed my opinion on the questions arising on the petition, but as they have been fully argued, I thought I might as well express the opinion which I formed.

The petition came on before the Full Bench for hearing.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—A person who takes a mortgage after an auction-sale is a person who 'owns such property' in Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code. Under section 310A of the repealed Code the subsequent mortgagee was held to be an owner. A person who acquires title subsequent to the auction sale can apply under Order XXI, rule 89. See Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Sankaran Nair (1) and Subbarayudu v. Lakshminarasamma (2).

[WALLIS, C. J.—There is a change in the language in the new Code from the corresponding provision in the old Code. A usufructuary mortgagee is only a person holding an interest in the property and not its owner.]

He is a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 146 and can apply as such.

He has made the deposit on behalf of the jugdment debtor and can at least be treated as the latter's agent. See Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Sankaran Nair (1) and Subbarayudu v. Lakshminarasamma (2).

JUDGMENT.—This petition, which originally came before Abdur Rahim, J., had been posted before a Bench because the learned Judge doubted Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Sankaran Nair (1) and Subbarayudu v. Lakshminarasamma (2). Confining ourselves to the facts of this case, we are clearly of opinion that the petitioner who acquired a mortgage interest after the Court sale is not a person entitled to apply to set aside the sale under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code. A person having an interest in the property acquired before the sale is authorised to apply to set aside the sale. The petitioner has acquired an interest, but acquired it after the sale and, therefore, does not come within the rule. As regards the further contention that he made the application to set aside the sale as agent of the owner, the judgment-debtor, the lower Court has found as a fact that he did not, and we cannot interfere in revision. The petition is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of possession of land.

The case for the plaintiff is that the land was made over to the defendant for a period of eleven months on condition, first, that the defendant would bring the land under cultivation, would make over half the produce to the plaintiff and take the other half as his remuneration, and, secondly, that at the end of the eleven months, the defendant would quit the land without notice,

The defendant entered into possession but at the end of the prescribed period did not vacate the land. The result was the institution of this suit.

The defendant pleaded, contrary to the terms of the document executed by him in favour of the plaintiff, that he was an occupancy raiyat and was, not liable to be ejected. He alleged that he was at the date of the execution of the document, a settled raiyat of the village holding other lands, and that as he became a tenant of the disputed land the moment the deed was executed and he entered into possession thereunder, he forthwith acquired the status of an occupancy raiyat in respect of the land in suit. Mr. Justice Newbould has accepted this contention and has dismissed the claim for ejectment.

The terms of the contract between the parties are set out at length in the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould and need not be reproduced here. It is sufficient to say that the document does not, in our opinion, create a tenancy. In the first place, there is no covenant to pay rent and, in the second place, there is no clause which creates in favour of the defendant an interest in the land. Consequently, the two essential elements requisite for a lease are absent. The defendant no doubt became a burgadar but it is well-settled that a burgadar is not necessarily a tenant. A burgadar is a person who enters into a profit-sharing arrangement; he cultivates the land, gives a share of the profits to the owner and keeps the remainder as his remuneration. In individual cases, the terms of the contract may indicate that the intention of the parties was to create in the grantee an interest in the land; in other words, if there is a demise, a tenancy is created. But the case before us is not of that description. There is one important feature of the transaction, which makes it plain that the parties did not intend that there should be a tenancy. The period during which the contract was to subsist was fixed at only eleven months; it is certainly surprising to be told that in this country cultivating leases are granted for such a short term as eleven months. Besides, there was here an express undertaking by the defendant to quit the land without notice upon the expiry of the prescribed term. It is not disputed that, at the date of the arrangement, the defendant was known to be a settled raiyat of the village. Consequently, the moment he obtained a tenancy right in the disputed land he would acquire the status of an occupancy raiyat under sub-section 1 of section 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In such circumstances, it is inconceivable that the defendant should have solemnly agreed to quit the land at the end of 11 months. We cannot assume that the object of the parties was not to give expression to the real understanding between them, but rather to conceal the true arrangement. Reviewing all the terms of the contract, we feel no doubt that there was no tenancy and that the defendant was bound to quit the land upon the expiry of the prescribed period.

It is not necessary to refer in detail to the decisions mentioned in the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould. Each case must turn upon terms of the contract between the parties. In the present case we feel no doubt that the Subordinate Judge correctly made a decree for ejectment in favour of the plaintiff which should not have been reversed.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree made by Mr Justice Newbould set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs here and before Mr. Justice Newbould.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

In fixing the rate of maintenance to be awarded to a Hindu widow, the amount of stridhan possessed by her should be taken into consideration. [p. 865, col. 2.]

LAKSHMIBAI v. VISVANATHA RAO.

The right of a Hindu widow to claim maintenance is dependent on her remaining chaste, and she is liable to forfeit that right by subsequent acts of unchastity, and the existence of an agreement or of a decree securing maintenance to her would afford her no protection from such forfeiture. But a repentant widow may not be absolutely abandoned, she must be provided with a starving maintenance so that she may not be compelled by need to lapse into an immoral life. [p. 865, col. 2; p. 866, cols 1 & 2.]

In a suit against a Hindu widow for the discontinuance of an allowance secured to her as maintenance under a decree, on the ground of her unchastity, the widow can only succeed if she can show not only that at the time of the plaint she was leading a chaste life, but also that she had done so for a considerable period previously, so as to lead to the conclusion that she has completely renounced her immoral course, and is a reformed woman. Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Damoh, in Civil Suit No. 6 of 1918, dated the 31st January 1919.

Messrs. G. L. Subhedar and R. B. Tikekar, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint in the suit out of which this appeal arises was filed on the 21st February 1918. The plaintiff is the son by his first wife of one Narayan Rao Apte of Mauza Patharia in the Damoh Tahsil who died on the 12th February 1907. The plaintiff's step-mother, Lakshmi Bai, was then only 15 years old and had borne no children to her husband. The plaintiff's age is given in the plaint as 32, so that, at his father's death, he was 21 years old.

The defendant lived as a member of the plaintiff's household till September 1910 when differences arose which led to her occupying a separate portion of the family house and cooking for herself. On the 17th February 1911 she sued the present plaintiff for possession of 71·95 acres of absolute occupancy land in Mauza Chhapri Sadak with a montly allowance of Rs. 85 for maintenance, or alternatively for a maintenance allowance of Rs. 100 per mensem. This suit was compromised on the 5th July following and a decree was passed the same day embodying the terms of the compromise. Under this arrangement the widow became entitled to a monthly allowance of Rs. 45 for life and to residence in a house opposite the principal family dwelling. She was also permitted to retain the stridhan in her possession.

The present litigation was started because the plaintiff ascertained the defendant to be pregnant. He alleged that since their separation in 1910 the defendant's conduct had been wanting in modesty and, in view of her final lapse from virtue, he prayed that the decree of July 1911 be set aside, that the maintenance allowance prescribed thereby be discontinued and that the house assigned for the widow's residence be restored to him.

The defendant gave birth to a girl on the 7th April at Garhakota and in her written statement filed on the 23rd idem admitted this fact. She pleaded that the decree of 1911 could not be set aside, inasmuch as it was passed upon a compromise under which the defendant relinquished her claim to land and also to some stridhan which she alleged to be in the plaintiff's possession. She also pleaded that, in the event of the decree being set aside, she was entitled to food, clothing and a house to live in.

In an oral statement it was further pleaded for the defendant that the birth of a child was due to a single intercourse and that she had at no time committed any other act of immorality. She was said to be penitent and to have resolved, on regaining her health, to undergo the penances enjoined by the Shastras. Rs. 25 per mensem was said to be the minimum allowance to which she was entitled, even if her claim was restricted to starving maintenance.

The plaintiff replied that the defendant had been leading an immoral and unchaste life for several years and was in no way repentant.

The following issues were framed:—

1. Does a single act of unchastily divest a widow of her right of maintenance and residence in the family house as against her step-son?

2. Was the defendant guilty of only a single set of unchastity as alleged by her and was she repentant and did she revert to path of morality when the suit was instituted? Or has she been leading an immoral life persistently for several years and is still unrepentant and not inclined to improve her character?

3. (a) Can the maintenance allowance not be reduced and the right of residence forfeited or curtailed, because the same were fixed by a decree obtained on a compromise between the parties and also because the compromise contained no condition as regards observance of chastity on defendant's part ?

(b) Should an implied agreement for its observance be presumed ?

(c) Was the compromise arrived at between the parties in consideration of the relinquishment by the defendant of interest in land and stridhan ?

4. (a) If the defendant is not entitled to maintenance and residence as fixed by the decree, is she entitled to starving maintenance ?

(b) Is she entitled to residence in the family house ?

(c) If so, what starving maintenance would be proper taking the condition and position of the defendant in life and what arrangements be made for her residence ?

The trial Judge found that as an unchaste widow the defendant could claim only a compassionate allowance with just enough accommodation near the family house to afford her a chance of repentance and reformation. He also held, on the evidence of a number of witnesses, that the defendant had been pregnant in 1912 also, that her subsequent conduct was highly suspicious and that she could not be regarded as penitent, inasmuch as she had not up to the date the case was closed for judgment performed the necessary rites of expiation though performance was not prevented by ill health or want of money. With regard to the compromise, the Judge considered that the allowance of Rs. 45 was fixed independently of the claim which each party set up against the other for ornaments and that the possession of absolute occupancy land which Lakshmi Bai claimed was intended to be nothing more than a substitute for a corresponding cash allowance. The finding on parts (a) and (b) of the third issue is thus expressed:—

"Here the suit was purely one for maintenance and the maintenance allowance was fixed not in consideration of any relinquishment of estate but of the general right which under the Hindu Law every widow has of being maintained out of the joint family property in which her deceased husband had a share. This right is not based on any contract, but on the general principles of Hindu Law. [per Ranade, J., in Gopikabai v. Dattatraya (1)]. In such cases there is a presumption that the right is subject to a change in the circumstances. The mere fact that the amount has been fixed by a decree or agreement would not affect the question. If the widow becomes unchaste or the estate suffers in value and in income the allowance can be forfeited or reduced [see the Bombay ruling cited above and also Sathyabhama v Kesavacharya (2)]. I hold, accordingly, that the right of maintenance and residence can in this case be curtailed or forfeited, even though fixed by a decree upon a compromise, and that the condition for observance of chastity must be presumed as a necessary stipulation for continuance of the maintenance allowance in this case."

On the first and second parts of the fourth issue the finding was that, failing clear proof of repentance and reformation the defendant was not entitled either to starving maintenance or to accommodation in the family house. In this connection, the Judge laid stress on the fact that the defendant had refused to give the name of her paramour and so to negative the possibility that he is a man of lower caste than herself.

A finding on the 1st part of the fourth issue thus became unnecessary, but the Judge held that a cash allowance of Rs. 10 per mensem and accommodation in a small cottage built of straw and leaves close to the main family house would constitute all the defendant could legally claim.

The decree in the former suit was then set aside in so far as it directs payment of Rs. 45 per mensem and charges the amount upon the family property. The defendant was also directed to restore to the plaintiff the house mentioned in the former decree. She has, therefore, appealed to this Court.

The first five grounds of appeal are mainly directed against the lower Court's finding that the defendant was pregnant in Sambat 1969, that is, in the year 1912. In this connection, the plaintiff produced witnesses who professed to have detected from the defendant's size that she was well advanced in pregnancy in June 1912. After long arguments on both sides it was eventually conceded by the plaintiff's Pleader that this pregnancy could not be regarded as satisfactorily established. I have carefully perused all the evidence in this connection and am clearly of opinion that the lower Court was wrong in its view. The movements of the defendant who gave evidence as her own first witness can be traced with considerable certainty from her deposition read with those of the plaintiff's father-in law Ganpat Rao (P. W. No. 10) and the medical witnesses, namely, Lt. Col. P. K. Chitale (D. W. No. 6), T. S. Dhamankar (D. W. No. 7) and Sub-Assistant Surgeon Kunjbeharilal (P. W. No. 7). Lt. Col. Chitale was Civil Surgeon of the Damoh District from May 1905 to November 1914 and it is certain that he was treating the defendant for some affection of the liver and indigestion in June 1912. Not only did he prescribe for her in that month, but he examined her abdomen. In the witness-box he stated that not having examined her with the object of discovering whether she was pregnant or not he could not make a definite assertion on that point. From Patharia, after consulting the Civil Surgeon at Damoh, the defendant went to Bombay where she was treated by Dhamankar. From Bombay she went to Poona where, according to her account, she continued taking the medicine prescribed for her by Dhamankar. The plaintiff examined one S. V. Bhave (P. W. No. 11) who, on the 2nd December 1912, four months after the occurrence, professed to have treated the defendant for asthma and indigestion and gave Ganpat Rao (P. W. No. 10) a certificate to that effect.

I agree with the lower Court that S. V. Bhave, who did not examine the defendant's abdomen at all, cannot be regarded as supporting the allegation that she was pregnant. His evidence, however, coupled with that of Ganpat Rao, goes to support the defendant's story that she was in Poona about August 1912. The defendant denies that she took medicine from any medical practitioner at Poona and it is possible that S. V. Bhave, who was examined on commission at Bombay without seeing the defendant, has not correctly stated her symptoms, but I see no reason to doubt that a woman giving the defendant's name consulted him : had he been an entirely false witness, he would probably have gone to the length of stating that the woman of that name was undoubtedly pregnant. From Poona the defendant returned to Bombay for a short time and thence repaired to Garha, four miles from Jubbulpore, where Sub-Assistant Surgeon Kunjbeharilal was in charge of the local dispensary. This officer had been stationed at Patharia from 1907 to 1910. Ganpat Rao followed the defendant from Poona to Garha where he reported to the Deputy Commissioner, Jubbulpore, that she was suspected to be pregnant and obtained an order for her examination by a lady Doctor, Mrs. Brookes. It appears from the Sub Assistant Surgeon's deposition and the report (Exhibit P3) made by Mrs. Brookes on the 23rd October 1912 that the defendant was at Garha for a period of 10 or 12 days ending on or about the 21st October. The Sub-Assistant Surgeon treated the defendant for hysteria and dyspepsia and deposed that she was not so far advanced in pregnancy that her condition could be ascertained without special examination. He did not himself examine her, but I regard his statement as establishing definitely the falsity of the allegation made by residents of Patharia to the effect that the defendant was obviously pregnant in the preceding June.

From Jubbulpore the defendant went via Bhopal to her sister's home at Kalapipar in the Bhopal State. Neither party has examined the sister but it is part of the plaintiff's case that the defendant was back in Patharia with her abdomen in a normal condition before the end of November.

Bhao Tambe (P. W. No. 9) the Dharmadhikari, or the principal priest of Patharia, upon whom the lower Court has placed special reliance, deposed that he left Patharia in June 1912 because he was pressed to take action against the defendant on the ground of her supposed pregnancy and that he returned in Aghan Sambat 1969 (25th November—24th December 1912) in consequence of receiving a letter from several leaders of Patharia society which bears date Kartik Sudhi 13 Sambat 1969 (22nd November 1912) and is marked Exhibit P 4. The writers of this letter which urged him to return immediately were actuated by a desire to deal suitably with the defendant who was supposed to have given birth to a child. He went on to allege that a meeting was held as soon as he got back to Patharia at which the defendant and all who should have social intercourse with her were ex-communicated. This decision was, however, not reduced to writing and the actual ex-communication by written resolution was not effected till Asadh 30, 1974 (19th June 1917). In cross-examination, the Dharamadhikari admitted that the ostensible reason for ex-communicating the defendant was that she remained untonsured, though a widow and that her pregnancy could not be clearly proved.

What could not be proved to the satisfaction of persons so nearly interested as the defendant's caste fellows in Patharia itself within a few days of the defendant's delivery, if she had really been pregnant, could not well be established six years later. It is significant also that the charge of pregnancy in 1912 was not advanced either in the plaint or in the pleadings. The plaint merely alleges that after separating from the plaintiff the defendant's conduct grew more and more blameworthy and the only oral pleading on the point—that of the 4th May 1914—fails to make this allegation any more definite. The second issue was, accordingly, vague and it is conceivable that, if it had been more definite, the defendant would have been able to disprove the pregnancy of 1912 in a more convincing manner.

Of misconduct other than that which led to the birth of her child in April 1918 I can find no satisfactory evidence, though Ganpat Rao went so far as to declare that the defendant was twice pregnant after November 1912 and before she conceived in or about July 1917. It appears from her own evidence that she went to Allahabad in 1915, but Ganpat Rao did not pursue her on that occasion as he had done in 1912, and she could hardly have passed undetected through a pregnancy while at Patharia with numerous enemies around her.

Dharamadhikari Bhao Tambe described her conduct in his deposition as "Nirkush" (reckless) and "Swachhand" (selfwilled). This priest, who is 68 years old, appears to be a very orthodox Brahmin and his view as to how a widow should behave may well be unduly strict for the present time. He objects to the defendant's going out frequently, well dressed in the tonga of the same individual whom he refrained from naming. Ramchandra Rao (P. W. No. 2), the Schoolmaster of Patharia, considers the defendant's conduct improper because he saw her several times in 1912 and later walking about alone at night. The same witness, however, admits that the defendant's mother and two brothers lived with her. The plaintiff himself did not enter the witness-box though he was closely interested in watching the defendant's conduct and had every opportunity of discovering the objectionable conduct for himself. As pointed out by Sargent, C. J., in Valu v. Ganga (3), there is a marked distinction between actual unchastity and conduct which is "headstrong" or "perverse."

For the defence, there is some evidence to the effect that the defendant's conduct was not open to serious objection so far as it was really known to her fellow villagers in general. It appears that Balwant Rao Tikekar, one of the leaders of Patharia society, was suspected of intriguing with her and that he got into trouble with his caste fellows over the return in July 1912 of his son who had just been called to the English Bar. A dispute arose as to the son's re-admission to caste and the orthodox party headed by Bhao Tambe were unwilling to admit that the prescribed expiation (Prayaschit) could properly be effected. It is impossible to unravel the tangled scale of village politics from the evidence on the record, nor is it essential that I should do so. Suffice it to say, that I am not satisfied as to the defendant's having been guilty of any serious misconduct prior to the act by which she conceived the child born in April 1918.

The eighth ground of appeal relates to a statement in paragraph 21 of the lower Court's judgment to the effect that the plaintiff was, admittedly, a minor when his father died. It would seem that the learned Judge misread the second paragraph of the plaint which gives the defendant's, not the plaintiff's, age at the time of Narayan Rao Apte's death. The point, however, is not of real importance, inasmuch as, whether the plaintiff was 17 or 21 at the time, he would not be likely to deprive his step-mother either mmediately or within the next four years of any ornaments her husband may have left in her possession.

The argument based upon the sixth, seventh and ninth grounds of appeal is briefly to the effect that the decree of 1911 is not an ordinary decree for maintenance which could be set aside because of the widow's unchastity. Her case is said to be similar to that in Bhup Singh v. Lachman Kunwar (4), in that she gave up her claim to possession of certain absolute occupancy land and such of her stridhan as was in her step son's possession. In the Allahabad case a widow laid claim to property which she alleged to have belonged to her husband separately as against his two brothers and her claim was compromised by assigning a small part of that property to her by way of maintenance. The widow's subsequent unchastity was held not to involve forfeiture of the assigned property in the absence of an express stipulation to that effect.

So far as the absolute occupancy land mentioned in the plaint of 1911 is concerned, I agree with the lower Court that there was no serious claim for reinstatement in possession as distinct from the claim for maintenance. It is true that the plaint described the land as given to the plaintiff for charities, but the history of its acquisition, which appears from Exhibits P-12 and P-13, coupled with the nature of the relief claimed which has already been described in the second paragraph of this judgment, makes it sufficiently clear that Lakshmi Bai had no shadow of title to this property. The greater part, 64·57 acres, was sold to her husband on the 17th March 1898 by the tenant Daulat by way of satisfying several old debts, one of which was secured by a mortgage dead executed on the 7th August 1885. It is common ground that Narayan Rao had no share in the village where the land lies until 1906 when he purchased an 8-annas share, and that the holding was recorded in Lakshmi Bai's name shortly before this share was acquired. In the suit of 1911 the present plaintiff, Vishwanath Rao, pleaded as defendant that the object of having Lakshmi Bai recorded as tenant was to prevent the land being classed as Khudkasht, and this strikes me as probably true. The rest of the holding was ostensibly purchased by Lakshmi Bai on the 16th June 1909, the vendors being Daulat's sons who conveyed the land in order to satisfy a mortgage executed by Daulat as far back as the 9th October 1899. It is obvious and is not denied that the original creditor was Narayan Rao and I accept the explanation offered in 1911 and repeated in the present litigation that the object of the transaction was to avoid classification of the land as Khudkasht. In these circumstances, I do not think the decision in Bhup Singh v. Lachman Kunwar (4) affords the appellant any assistance. As pointed out by the lower Court, the duties of a widow include some measure of charity: see Sreemutty Nittokissoree Dossee v. Jogendro Nauth (5). The allegation in 1911, therefore, that the land was assigned to her for charity is not really inconsistent with her holding it by way of maintenance.

With regard to the stridhan, the position in 1911 was this. Vishwanath Rao alleged that Lakshmi Bai had retained ornaments not part of her stridhan and denied that he had any of her stridhan with himself. On the other hand, Lakshmi Bai asserted that all the ornaments in her possession were her stridhan and that Vishwanath Rao had some belonging to her in his possession. This dispute was settled by an agreement that Lakshmi Bai should retain the stridhan already in her possession and make no claim against Vishwanath Rao for more. Now, there is authority for the view that, in fixing the rate of maintenance to be awarded, the amount of stridhan possessed by the claimant should be taken into consideration: See Soorendra Nath Sen v. Hemangini Dasi (6) and the cases there cited. It follows that in this matter also there was no claim by the widow which could be treated as altogether separate from her claim for maintenance. And even if this view be incorrect, I think the parties must be taken to have compromised their dispute on the implied understanding that the widow would remain chaste.

The authorities seem to me to justify recognition of a principle that the right of a Hindu widow as distinguished from a wife to claim maintenance is dependent on her remaining chaste. The text of Narada in Chapter II, section 1, of the Mitakshara, as translated in Volume XXXIII, Sacred Books of the East, at page 1916, runs as follows:—

"They (brothers) shall make provision for (deceased brother's) women till they die, in case they remain faithful to the bed of their husband. Should the women not (remain chaste), they must cut off that allowance."

In Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani (7) their Lordships of the Privy Council, citing this text of Narada as quoted in the Dayabhage, treated it as showing that the right of maintenance was liable to resumption or forfeiture for unchastity and remarked as follows:—

"The right to receive maintenance is very different from a vested estate in property, and, therefore, what is said as to maintenance cannot be extended to the case of a widow's estate by succession."

The question in that case was whether a widow, who had succeeded to the estate of her husband in default of male issue, was liable to forfeit that estate by reason of her subsequent acts of unchastity. Their Lordships' opinion as to maintenance was, therefore, an obiter dictum but it was relied upon in Rama Nath v. Rajonimoni Dasi (8) where the position of a disloyal wife and that of an unchaste widow were distinguished, and it was laid down as a settled principle that a Hindu widow's right to claim maintenance is forfeited upon her unchastity. This was followed in Radha v. Mathura (9). That neither an agreement nor even a decree securing maintenance suffices to protect a widow from this forfeiture seems to be the result of the following cases:—

Vishu Shambhog v. Manjamma (10), Nigamma v. Virabhaara (11), Daulta Kuari v. Meghu Tiwari (12).

In Sathyabhama v. Kesavacharya (2) a starving maintenance was allowed to a widow who had led an immoral life, but this was because, at the time of the suit, she had reformed her ways and was living with her people. The decision in Bhup Singh v. Lachman Kunwar (4) (cited above), relied upon by the present appellant, was distinguished on the ground that the right to maintenance is dependent upon texts which do not affect succession or inheritance. In Parami Ramayya v. Mahadevi (13) the plaintiff was a Hindu widow who had for some time led an unchaste life and given birth to a child, but had since then remained chaste.

The Madras and the Bombay case last cited are authorities for the proposition that a repentant widow, no less than a disloyal wife, may not be absolutely abandoned, but must be provided with a starving maintenance so that she may not be compelled by need to continue immoral relations with any one. Assuming in the appellant's favour that, if repentant, she would be entitled to a starving maintenance on the strength of the text of Manu (XI), 189,—Sacred Books of the East, Volume XXV, page 469—which enjoins for all female out-castes that clothes, food and drink shall be given to them and that they shall live close to the family house, it remains to deal with the appellant's contention that such repentance has been made out in the present case. The only evidence I need refer to in this connection is that of the defendant herself and her witnesses Antaji Buao, No. 2, Ramchandra Rao, No. 3 and Ganpat Rao, No. 4. The defendant did not expressly state that she was guilty of no more than one act of sexual intercourse, though that was stated in her pleadings, nor am I disposed to believe that this is the case. When the suit was filed her child was still unborn. In July 1918 when she gave evidence the child was already over three months old, but she had still to make expiation by prayaschit. Antaji Buao (D. W. No. 2) said no more than this:—

Examination in chief :—"I considered her a chaste woman till she lately delivered a female child. Since the delivery she expresses repentance for what has happened. I did not find her Nirkush since then."

Cross-examination :—"I had no talk with the defendant as yet. It was about 10 or 12 days ago that the defendant came to me and said 'you excuse me. I am sorry for what I have done.' She never talked to me directly but through my people."

Ramchandra Rao's evidence is similar. On learning a few days before his examination, on the 3rd September 1918, that the defendant had given birth to a child, he went to her in response to a letter asking him to give evidence and seeing him she expressed repentance and cried.

Ganpat Rao (D.W. No. 4) said as follows :—

"I used to dine at defendant's also. I heard nothing damaging to defendant's character. I saw her several times, but did not find anything wrong with her manners, etc., to make me doubt her character until I learned that she had delivered a female child. She is now repentant."

I do not think that, on evidence of this sort, it can be stated that the defendant has established the kind of repentance required. In Kandasami Pillai v. Murugammal (14) Subramania Ayyar, J., said:—

"I have little doubt that before a decree for maintenance is given to a wife who has once been guilty of infidelity, she must show, not only that at the time of the plaint and the trial she was leading a chaste life, but also that she had done so for a sufficient period previously so as clearly to lead to the conclusion that she has completely renounced her immoral course, and that, in fact, she is a reformed woman."

In Parami Ramayya v. Mahadevi (15), one recent Bombay ruling, the widow had maintained a chaste life for upwards of eight years before suing. While in an advanced state of pregnancy the defendant would be unattractive to men generally and it is, therefore, impossible to say with certainty that, when the plaint was filed, she was already re-established in a moral course of life.

My conclusion is that the lower Court has rightly set aside the decree in the appellant's favour and declared that she is not entitled to maintenance.

It is unnecessary to decide whether the act that the defendant has given birth to a child permanently disentitles her to a maintenance. In this connection it is urged for the plaintiff that if her paramour is a Sudra no expiation is possible. It was, however, for the plaintiff to plead and prove the identity of the father and in the absence of any evidence on this point I must hold that he is not a Sudra.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. With regard to costs in the lower Court I direct that the appellant do bear her own. Much of the plaintiff's evidence was directed to showing that the defendant was pregnant in 1912 and this he has failed to establish. I, therefore, direct that he pay the costs incurred in respect of his own witnesses his other costs will be paid by the defendant.

Appeal dismissed.

Where there is no indication in a lease that the rent is fixed in perpetuity and that it would not be varied from time to time, the landlord is not precluded from exercising the right of enhancement. The mere fact that a tenure is hereditary does not show that the rent of the tenure has been fixed in perpetuity. [p. 870, cols 1 & 2.]

It is only where the terms of a contract are ambiguous that evidence may be given of the conduct of the parties in contradiction to the terms of the contract. [p. 870, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Panton, dated the 22nd July 1919, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 114 of 1918, against the decree of the Special Judge Mymensing, dated the 8th October 1917, affirming that of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Mymensing, dated the 21st December 1916.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of PANTON, J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Special Judge of Mymensingh, affirming a decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer. The question is whether the rent of a tenure is liable to enhancement. The Courts below have held that it is so liable and it is against this finding that the tenure holder now appeals.

The tenure was the subject of a lease granted in the year 1823. In evidence of this we have a kabuliyat (Exhibit A 3) executed by one Krishna Hari Sarma Bhattacharjee in favour of the Rajas of Susang whose spiritual guide he is said to have been. The yearly rent then reserved was Rs. 173 8·12*g*. Two years later there was a further arrangement between the parties, evidenced by the "tahut" in A·2, under which an additional sum of 14 annas a year was to be paid along with the rent on account of "dakhil kotwali." There appears to have been no subsequent alteration of the sum paid yearly to the zemindars on account of the tenure and it has been the subject of two sales.

The question then is: "Does the lease in this case show that the rent is not liable to enhancement?" Upendra Lal Gupta v. Jogesh Chandra Roy (1). The material words of the kabuliyat of 1823 are these: "Having got a patni taluk...I shall pay in respect of it the annual jama of Rs. 173 8 12*g* as per Dowl, year after year, month after month...I shall not pay anything over and above that such as parganati cess, hal orajud, Sadigami, moteshar, Durgabari, etc ...Having got a deed granting talukdari rights...I shall remain in the enjoyment and possession thereof from generation to generation."

It is argued for the appellant that the use of the term patni taluk implies a fixity of rent; and in support of this argument the case of Tarinee Churn Gangooly v. Watson and Co. (2) is cited. The question then was whether a tenure was hereditary, and the considerations that apply to such a question are not the same as those applying to the question whether a tenure is one at fixed rent. In my opinion the resource that was there had to the description of patni taluk to be found in the Regulation of 1819 cannot safely be had when the fixity of rent is in question. There is, moreover, this further distinction that, in the contract then under consideration, the parties appear to have made express reference to that Regulation, a reference that is not to be found in the present instrument. I am unable to hold that the mere words "patni taluk" imply more than that the tenure was maurasi.

On the other hand, the learned Pleader for the respondents contends that the terms of the kabuliyat are plain to show that the lessors did not intend to restrict themselves in the matter of enhancing the rent. In my view, the meaning of the document is not free from doubt and the case is one of those in which we must look for its interpretation to the dealings of the parties in regard to the property.

The finding of the learned Judge is that the transaction of 1825, to which I have referred, amounted to a variation of the rent not corresponding to a variation in area, but that since that date the rent has been unvaried; and, he observes, "on the strength of this circumstance, combined with the clear creation of some permanent rights, the use of the term 'patni,' the position of Krishnahari as the spiritual guide of respondents' family, and the recognition of the transfer of the appellants, it is argued for the latter that the intention of the parties was that fixity should be one of the incidents of the permanent tenure." It is urged for the appellants here that this argument, so far as fixity of rent is meant, should have prevailed.

The arrangement of 1825 under which the additional 14 annas a year was paid by the lessee is not, in my view, a matter of much importance and I do not infer from it an intention of the parties to vary the rent of the tenure We do not know exactly what "dakhil kotwali" was; but it is clear enough that it was not a payment by way of rent. "The addition of a small illegal cess of Re 1- 3 0 is no such variation of the proper rent of the jama as deprives the tenant of the presumption which the lease otherwise gives him." Sumeeroodeen Lushkur v. Huronath Roy (3). And, however this may be, a fresh engagement was entered into in 1825, vide in A 2, in terms, but for this small additional payment, similar to those set out in the kabuliyat of 1823 and there has been no change of rent since then.

The force of Krishnahari's having been the lessor's spiritual guide appears to be that for that reason he obtained the settlement at a rate very considerably below that paid by the previous tenant—vide in A-1; and this reduced rate was not changed when the tenure passed into the hands of persons other than Krishnahari. The transfers referred to were effected in the year 1897 by the deeds in 1 and 2. In these the tenure is described as a miras taluk with a kaimi mokarari jama and the price paid was Rs. 6,325.

From these facts the proper inference is, in my opinion, that the parties intended to create by the lease of 1823 a tenure with a rent fixed in perpetuity. It is true that we have not here all the elements that were present in Robert Watson & Co. v. Radha Nath Singh (4), and that some of them in Ram Dayal Giri v. Midnapur Zemindary Co. (5) are absent But the present case appears to me to be a good deal stronger than an unreported case decided by a Division Bench of this Court (Second Appeal No. 1781 of 1911) [Purna Chandra Ghose v. Collector of Khulna (6) where the effect of kaimi patta of the year 1828 was under consideration, and where it was held that "the terms of the kabuliyat and the evidence of enjoyment at an unvaried rent, when taken together are sufficient,"...to discharge the burden of proof falling in the first place on the tenant to show fixity of rent.

I find that the rent of the tenure in suit is fixed in perpetuity and set aside the decree of the Courts below. The Record of Rights will be amended accordingly. The appellants will get their costs throughout from the respondents

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACIG. C. J.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Panton in a proceeding under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for determination of the nature of a tenure.

The landlords, who are the appellants in this Court, alleged that the rent of the tenure was enhanceable; the tenants contended, on the other hand that the rent had been fixed in perpetuity. The Court of first instance decided in favour of the landlords and that view was accepted by the lower Appellate Court. On second appeal to this Court, Mr. Justice Panton has reversed the concurrent decisions of the Courts below, and has come to the conclusion that the rent of the tenure has been fixed in perpetuity.

In the interpretation of the contract of tenancy, which has been placed before us and is dated the 31st August 1823, we must bear in mind the principle enunciated by the Judicial Committee in the case of Bamasoondery Dassyah v. Radhika Chowdhrain (7), where Sir James W. Colvile observed as follows: "A suit to enhance rents proceeds on the presumption that a Zemindar holding under the Perpetual Settlement has the right, from time to time, to raise the rents of all the rent-paying lands within his Zemindary according to the Pergunnah or current rates, unless either he is precluded from the exercise of that right by a contract binding on him, or the lands in question can be brought within one of the exemptions recognised by Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793; and it also assumes, that the defendant has some valid tenure or right of occupancy in the lands which are the subject of the suit."

In the case before us, it is not contended that the lands in question can be brought within one of the exemptions recognised by Bengal Regulation VII of 1793. Consequently, the only point for consideration is, whether the Zemindar is precluded from the exercise of the right to enhance the rent of the tenure by a contract binding on him.

Reliance has been placed by the tenants on the use of the expression 'patni taluk' in the contract of tenancy, which, it has been argued on the authority of the decision in Tarinee Churn Gangooly v. Watson and Co., (2) prima facie imports a hereditary tenure. But that is not sufficient to support the case of the respondents, who urge that the tenure is not merely hereditary but is held on a rent fixed in perpetuity. We cannot overlook in this connection that it was conceded in the Court of first instance that the document does not create a patni taluk in the technical sense of that expression as used in Regulation VIII of 1819. On behalf of the respondents, an endeavour has been made to resile from that position in this Court. But it is perfectly plain that this document does not create a patni taluk; in other words, a taluk subject to the summary procedure for realisation of rent provided by Regulation VIII of 1819. We have, then, two other clauses in the document which bear upon the question now under consideration. In one clause, it is stated that "on account of this" (i.e., the land described) "I" (the tenant) "shall pay the annual rent of Rs. 173-8as.-12 gds. year by year and month by month as per Dowl in the khas taluk." The other clause is that, "I shall continue to be in enjoyment down to my sons, grandsons, etc., on receipt of the talukdari rents according to custom, on account of tanks, bheris, etc., lying in the village." There can be no doubt, in our opinion, that, as shown by these clauses, the tenure was intended to be hereditary. But the mere fact that a tenure is hereditary does not show that the rent of the tenure has been fixed in perpetuity. In this document, although we find expressions which show that the tenure was maurasi, there is nothing to show that the tenure was intended to be mokurari.

Reliance has been placed on behalf of the tenants on the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Port Canning and Land Improvement Co. Ltd. v. Katyani Debi (7), which, however, has no application to the circumstances of the present litigation. There the land was let out for purposes of reclamation; no rent was payable for some years from the commencement of the tenancy; then there was a progressive scale of rent. The Judicial Committee held, confirming the view of this Court, Katyani Debi v. Port Canning and Land Improvement Co. (8), that the rent mentioned in the lease as the last in the series of the progressive rents was intended to be fixed in perpetuity. In the case before us, the tenants covenanted to pay an annual rent of Rs. 173-8as.-12 gds. There is no indication that this rent was fixed in perpetuity and would not be varied from time to time. Consequently, this document does not show that the landlord had precluded himself from the exercise of the right of enhancement, by a contract binding on him.

Reference has been made to a subsequent document, dated the 9th December 1852, which, in our opinion, is of no assistance to the respondents. It merely shows that the lands of the taluk had become patit, and the landlord consequently granted a temporary remission; there is an express statement that, after the expiry of the period of temporary remission, the original rent would be revived. Consequently, we are thrown back on the initial contract between the parties dated the 31st August 1823, and, on the interpretation of that contract, we have already held that it does not preclude the landlord from enhancing the rent.

Reference has also been made to the conduct of the parties. In our opinion, in a case of this description the evidence of conduct is not relevant. If the terms of the contract are ambiguous, the rights of the parties may be determined with reference to the conduct of the parties: Hebbert v. Purchas (9); but, in any case, where the terms of the contract are unambiguous, no evidence can be given of the conduct of the parties in contradiction to the terms of the contract: North Eastern Railway Co. v. Hastings (10).

We feel no doubt that the Court of first instance took a correct view of the relative position of the parties in this case and its judgment was rightly affirmed by the Court of Appeal below. The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree made by Mr. Justice Panton set aside and that of the Court of Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 21, scope of—Applicability of section to execution proceedings—Jurisdiction, territorial, want of—Execution proceedings—Objection to jurisdiction, maintainability of.

The provisions of section 21, Civil Procedure Code, apply to all objections based on the alleged infringement of the provisions of sections 16 to 18, Civil Procedure Code, as regards the institution of suits relating to immoveable property. [p. 876, col. 1.]

The words "objection as to the place of suing" in section 21, Civil Procedure Code, include objections to the institution of the suit on the ground that the Court in which it was instituted had no jurisdiction over the immoveable property which was the subject of the suit. [p. 876, col. 1.]

Setrucherla Ramabhadraraju v. Maharaja of Jeypore, 51 Ind Cas 185; 42 M. 813; 17 A. L. J. 694; 37 M. L. J. 11; (1919) M. W. N. 502; 26 M. L. T. 127; 21 Bom. L. R. 914; 30 C. L. J 209; 23 C. W. N. 1033; 10 L. W. 362; 46 I. A. 151 (P. C.), explained.

The effect of section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code is that an objection to jurisdiction which an appellate or revisional Court is thereby precluded from allowing, must be considered cured for all purposes unless taken before the passing of the decree in the original Court, and if such objection is not so taken it cannot be entertained by the original Court in execution. [p. 876, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Ramnad, at Madura, in Execution Petition No. 7 of 1918, (in Original Suit No. 52 of 1899, Ramnad Sub-Court).

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.—The Ramnad Sub-Court had no jurisdiction to pass the final decree. There was a bifurcation of District Courts owing to the congestion of work in one Court. The Manamadura Munsif within which the suit property lies was not assigned to the Ramnad Sub Court but to the Ramnad District Court. The preliminary decree was not passed by the Ramnad Sub Court but by the Madura East Sub Court. The creation of a new Court in the District does not imply that it stepped into the shoes of the Court that was abolished.

The application for an order absolute was not an application in execution and when it was presented to the Ramnad Sub Court it was barred.

The application of section 21, Civil Procedure Code, must be restricted to cases relating to moveable property and contracts and should not be extended to suits relating to immoveable property.

The objection may be taken at any stage of the proceedings. By the mere fact that the objection was not taken in the earlier stages the party is not debarred from raising it at a later stage. The language of section 21, Civil Procedure Code, lends support to this view. The section requires the objection as to want of jurisdiction to be taken at or before the settlement of issues. In this case the Madura Sub-Court was abolished only after the settlement of issues. The objection could not obviously have been taken earlier. The controversy itself arose at a much later stage.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The Notification of the Madras Government creating the Ramnad Sub-Court expressly states that it is established instead of the Madura East Sub-Court which was abolished. That means that all the pending work of the abolished Court was assigned to the newly created Court.

In any event, the appellant must be deemed to have waived the objection as he never raised it either in his review petition nor did he appeal against the order of the Ramnad Sub-Court, passing an order absolute. The appellant should not be allowed to take the objection in execution. When the objection cannot be taken for the first time in appeal or revision, a Court of first instance cannot entertain it after the stage for objecting has passed.

ZAMINDAR OF ETTIYAPURAM v. CHIDAMBARAM CHETTY.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 27th and 28th of January 1920 upon perusing the petition of appeal, the order of the lower Court and the material papers in the case, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. S. Ramaswami Aiyar, Vakil for the Appellant, and of Mr. . V. Anantakrishna Aiyar, Vakil for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3, and Respondents Nos. 4 to 16 not appearing in person or by Pleader, and the case having stood over for consideration till 4th February 1920 the Court (Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.), made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

OLDFIELD, J.—The first question for our decision is whether the decree under execution was passed by a Court having jurisdiction; and it is only necessary to state the facts to show that it was not. The suit, Original Suit No. 38 of 899, was filed on a hypothecation in the Madura East Subordinate Court and a preliminary decree was passed there on 10th May 1900. Subsequently, the Ramnad District was constituted by notification No. 304, at page 592, Fort St. George Gazette, Part I, dated 24th May 1910, and by another notification No. 311, on page 593, the Madura East Court was abolished and the Subordinate Judge's Court of Ramnad was established with jurisdiction over the whole of Ramnad District except the District Munsif of Manamadura. The suit property lies in that Munsif and it, not being assigned to any other jurisdiction, fell to that of the District Court, which was established on the same date by notification No. 305. In 1916 application was made for final decree to the Subordinate Court of Ramnad and the decree now under execution was passed there in 1917.

It is clear that the Subordinate Court of Ramnad has never had jurisdiction over the suit property, and could never have entertained the suit, in which the decree relating to it has been passed. It is argued that as notification No. 311 refers to the Ramnad Subordinate Court as established, instead of the Madura East Subordinate Court, the former must be taken to have succeeded to the pending business of the latter. But, even if it were shown that Government have power by notification to regulate the distribution of judicial business in this manner, it would still be impossible to deduce an intention to do so from the words used. The lower Court contented itself with opining that the transfer of jurisdiction from the Ramnad Subordinate Court to the Ramnad District Court over the area in question did not take away the jurisdiction of the former over pending business; but the argument is vitiated by the misconception which runs through the judgment that the Ramnad Subordinate Court passed the preliminary decree and we have, in any case, been shown no authority for the proposition of law, which is involved The proceedings after the preliminary decree were proceedings in execution. Mahammad Husain v. Abdul Kareem (1). They were, therefore, governed by sectio 3and Civil Procedure Code, and, as there is no question of the decree having been sent for execution to the Ramnad Subordinate Court, it could not execute it, because it did not pass it and because, at the time of the application for final decree, it could not have had jurisdiction to try the suit, in which the preliminary decree had been passed There is no doubt that the final decree, in respect of which the present applicati n is made, was passed without jurisdiction.

We have next to deal with the more difficult contention advanced by the respondent that appellant cannot take objection to the decreeing Court's jurisdiction, because he did not do so at the earliest opportunity. Appellant was joined as 16th defendant by the Ramnad ubordinate Cour , when the final decree was passed, as a purchaser of part of the suit property. But he did not appear or state his objections; nor did he attack the jurisdiction of the Court or rely on any plea except limitation, when in I A. Nos. 293, 294 of 1917 he applied for a review of the order, which had been passed. The objection to the Court's jurisdiction was, in fact, taken for the first time in the present proceedings and the argument for respondents is that with reference to the decision in Gomatham Alamelu v Komandur Krishnamacharlu (2) and section 21, Civil Procedure Code, it cannot now be put forward

(1) 29 Ind. Cas. 237; 39 M. 544; 17 M. L. T. 424.

ZAMINDAR OF ETTIYAPURAM v. CHIDAMBARAM CHETTY.

It was decided generally in Haji Musa Haji Ahmed v. Purmanand Nursey (3) that the executing Court is entitled to enquire into the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree; and some argument was addressed to us, regarding the policy of the law and the necessity for a strict interpretation of sections 18 and 21 and the corresponding section 16 A in the former Code. The main objection, however, to their application to the facts before us was that, although they might deprive the party interested to object to the jurisdiction of his right to do so up to the termination of the proceedings or of any connected appeal, they do not deprive him absolutely of his right or bar its exercise at any later stage, such as that, which the present proceedings have reached. It is true that no such distinction was recognised or apparently suggested in Gomatham Alamelu v. Komandur Krishnamacharlu (2) and that decision was followed in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanthan Chettiar (4), Velayutha Muppan v. Subramaniam Chetti (5) and Annammal v. Sambasiva Aiyar (6), although, in the last mentioned, the question was of fraud at the trial and there was no question of execution. But the sections in question statedly relate only to suits and it is settled law that section 141 cannot be invoked as authorising the extension of the procedure in regard to suits to execution. The point is of importance and we doubt whether Gomatham Alamelu v. Komandur Krishnamacharlu (2) was rightly decided. We, therefore, refer for the opinion of a Full Bench the questions set out in my learned brother's judgment.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The decree under execution is a very old one. In Original Suit No. 58 of 1899, what is alleged by the respondent to be the preliminary decree, was passed on the 10th May 1900 by the Madura Sub-Court East which then had jurisdiction over the mortgaged property. Subsequently, there was a bifurcation of the District. In the division, all the Taluks over which the Madura Sub-Court East had original jurisdiction except the District Munsif of Manamadura were transferred to the Ramand Sub-Court. About the same time, to the District Court of Ramnad was assigned the two revenue Sub Divisions of Devakottah and Ramnad. Devakotta included the Manamadura District Munsif. The Notification of the Government of Madras was in May 1 00. On the 20th of November 1910, an application was made to the Sub Court of Ramnad for the final decree and the order was passed on the 29th March 1917.

The appellant before us obtained a money decree against the mortgagors in 1909. The equity of redemption was put up to auction and purchased by him.

Another transaction should be mentioned. On the 1st August 1900, a usufructuary mortgage was executed by the mortgagors to the decree-holders in Original Suit No. 59 of 1899 and to other decree-holders against the same judgment-debtors, with the object of enabling them to discharge all the encumbrances on the properties of the mortgags. A suit was instituted on this mortgage. In Second Appeal No. 178 of 1912, the mortgage was held to be invalid. While the second appeal was pending, the purchaser of the equity of redemption obtained possession. This was in 1916. The present application is for sale of the mortgaged property in pursuance of the decree absolute in the suit of 1899.

Some important questions of law have been raised in the case. I must say that their consideration by the lower Court has by no means been adequate or satisfactory.

The first point relates to the jurisdiction of the Ramnad Sub Court to pass the order absolute on the 19th March 1917. On this question I feel no doubt. The District Judge is wrong in saying that the original decree was passed by the Ramnad Sub-Court. That decree was undoubtedly passed by the Madura Sub Court, East. The question is, whether the Ramnad Sub Court which clearly had no territorial jurisdiction over the property was competent to pass the final decree.

Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar chiefly relied upon the notification of the Government, which is in these terms:—

The Governor in-Council, having resolved to abolish the Court of the Subordinate

Judge of Madura East in the District of Madura and to establish instead a Subordinate Judge's Court in the District of Ramnad hereby directs, etc.

The learned Vakil contended that the expression "instead" must be regarded as expressing the intention of the Government that all the decrees passed by the Madura Sub-Court East were to be considered as if they were passed by the newly constituted Sub Court of Ramnad. Apart from the question whether it is competent to the Executive Government to confer jurisdiction in this way, I am unable to construe the word "instead" as suggested. All that the notification meant was that the congestion of work which would result from the abolition of the Madura Sub-Court, East would be relieved by the constitution of the new Court.

On the question of law, I feel no difficulty in holding that the Ramnad Sub-Court had no power to pass the decree absolute. It was held in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (4) that a Court which has no territorial jurisdiction cannot attach and sell property. In Veerappa Chetti v. Ramaswami Chetti (7) that case and other cases were fully considered and it was pointed out that a Court which has no territoral jurisdiction cannot sell property although the decree for sale was passed by it when it had jurisdiction.

The Full Bench decision in Seeni Nadan v. Muthuswamy Pillai (8) does not affect this conclusion. On the other hand, the actual decision in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (4) which was not overruled by the Full Bench, supports the view we are taking.

It was contended for the appellant that an application for an order absolute is not an application in execution and that, therefore, it was barred by limitation when it was made to the Rammad Sub-Court. In this Presidency, from the Full Bench decision in Mallikarjunadu Setti v. Lingamurti Pantulu (9) it has always been held that an application for a final decree under the Transfer of Property Act was an application in execution. The latest decision upon that point is Mahammad Husain v. Abdul Kareem (10) where all the cases are reviewed. Reference may also be made to Munna Lal Parruck v. Sarat Chunder Mukerji (10). This contention must be overruled.

The main answer of Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar to the plea of want of jurisdiction was that the appellant was estopped from raising this contention. His argument was that, as there was no demur to the Ramnad Sub-Court dealing with the application for an order absolute and as there was no appeal against the order, the appellant cannot raise it in execution. He relied upon the language of section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code for this contention The plain terms of the section lend some support to his contention. He is also supported by Gomatham Alamelu v. Komandur Krishnamacharlu (2) and Velayutha Muppan v. Subramaniam Chetti (5).

On the other hand, certain observations in the decision of the Judicial Committee in Setrucherla Ramabhadraraju v. Maharaja of Jeypore (11) and the scheme of the Code suggest that the Legislature should not be presumed to have enacted that, by not objecting to jurisdiction, the parties are for ever concluded by the order passed. The result of such a view would be that, if both the plaintiff and the defendant agree, a matter relating to property outside the Presidency and even outside India, can be validly decided by our Courts. I think that, as a conclusion like this is likely to affect seriously the administration of justice, it demands careful examination.

The arrangement of sections in the Code of Civil Procedure is against interpreting section 21 in the way suggested by the learned Vakil for the respondents. Sections 16 and 17 deal with suits relating to immoveable property. Section 18, clause 1, refers to uncertainty as to local jurisdiction and provides for recording a statement and then proceeding with the suit. Clause 2 empowers a party if there is no such record to contest the matter in appeal, if there has been a failure of justice. Section 19 deals with jurisdiction regarding suits for moveables.

Section 20 deals with cases of contract and refers to the accrual of the cause of action in either the place where the offer is made or the acceptance was concluded. Then comes section 21. The contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant that this section is confined to cases relating to moveable property and to contracts and should not be extended to suits relating to immoveable property does not appear to me to be far-fetched. Whereas, section 18 speaks of local limits of jurisdiction, section 21 speaks of the place of suing, and there is some justification from the language of the JudicialCommittee for the suggestion that jurisdiction was not intended to be synonymous with the place of suing. The observations in Haji Musa Haji Ahmed v. Purmanand Nursey (3) also support this view.

I feel considerable doubt whether section 21 of the Act should be read as enacting that in all cases where there is no objection to jurisdiction, the party is not entitled to question it at any subsequent stage of the proceedings.

In this connection, I may refer to the argument that it is only in cases where jurisdiction depends on the ascertainment of facts that the theory of acquiescence should be invoked. The reference to the objection being taken before the settlement of issue supports this contention. The general principle being that want of jurisdiction would make an adjudication by a Court a nullity, section 21, which must be regarded as an exception to this rule, should be construed as referring only to cases in which want of jurisdiction has to be pleaded and to be established by evidence. But where every body must be presumed to be acquainted with a notification like the one now in question, there can be no necessity for allegation or proof.

There is one other matter which ought to be noticed, and that is, that section 21 is not applicable to execution proceedings. I am not much impressed by the argument. The principle underlying the section, even though the section may not in terms be applicable, should be extended to execution proceedings also. Observations to this effect are to be found in Veerappa Chetti v. Ramasami Chetti (7). However, even this question is not altogether free from doubt.

I think, therefore, that the following questions should be referred for the opinion of the Full Bench :—

1. Whether section 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure governs cases of want of territorial jurisdiction ?

2. Whether section 21 is applicable to execution proceedings ? and

3. Whether a party who does not raise objection to jurisdiction when a decree is made absolute is not entitled to plead in execution that the order was passed without jurisdiction ?

This appeal came on for hearing on the 29th and 30th March 1920 in pursuance of the above Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—In May 1900 the plaintiff duly instituted the present suit in the Subordinate Court of Madura West, where the mortgaged property was situated, and obtained a decree under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act. In May 1910, this Court was abolished, and, by virtue of section 37 of the Code of Civil Procedure, this suit was transferred by operation of law to the newly constituted District Court of Ramnad, as the place where the mortgaged property was situated was within the jurisdiction of that Court and was not within the jurisdiction of the newly constituted Subordinate Court of Ramnad. In 1916 the plaintiff applied to the Subordinate Court of Ramnad, which has, we have seen, had no jurisdiction over the suit, for a decree for sale under Order XXXIV, rule 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure and obtained the decree in 1917. The mistake appears to have been occasioned by the fact that the new Subordinate Court of Ramnad was described in the notification constituting it as created instead of the Subordinate Court of Madura West, whereas its territorial jurisdiction was more limited. The 16th defendant, who did not appear, applied for a review of the decree but not for want of jurisdiction, and his petition was dismissed as out of time. He did not appeal against the decree, as he might have done on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction or was erroneous or time barred. The plaintiff then filed Execution Petition No. 24 of 1914 in the District Court

Ramnad, which apparently returned it for presentation, or sent it directly, to the Subordinate Court of Ramnad which had passed the final decree. It was filed in that Court as Execution Petition No. 203 of 1917, and that Court thereupon transferred the decree for execution to the District Court of Ramnad within whose jurisdiction the mortgaged property is situated. These are the facts which have given rise to the reference. As regards the first question, I am clearly of opinion that the provisions of section 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to all objections based on the alleged infringement of the provisions of sections 16 to 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure as regards the institution of suits relating to immoveable property. The words "Objection as to the place of suing" in their ordinary meaning include objections to the institution of the suit on the ground that the Court in which it was instituted had no jurisdiction over the immoveable property which was the subject of the suit; and the words "place of suing" are used in the heading prefixed to section 15, as descriptive of the subject-matter of the provisions in sections 15 to 20, as to the Courts in which suits, including suits as to immoveable property, are to be instituted.

I do not think the recent decision of the Privy Council in Setrucherla Ramabhadraraju v. Maharaja of Jeypore (11) is opposed to this view of the scope of section 21. In that case a suit had been instituted in the Subordinate Court of Vizagapatam on a mortgage of property which was partly situated in a Scheduled District over which the Subordinate Court had no jurisdiction and to which the Civil Procedure Code had not been applied. The contention for the appellant was that section 21 only applied where the right place of suing was one subject to the Code. On this ground their Lordships held that the objection was not an objection to the place of suing which could be cured by section 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure They went further and held that the order for sale was bad as made under sections of the Code which did not apply to a Scheduled District. They had not to consider the application of section 21 where all the mortgaged property was within the jurisdiction of Courts governed by the Code of Civil Procedure.

As regards the second question, section 21 forbids any appellate or revisional Court to allow any objection as to the place of suing unless it was taken in the original Court and even then unless there was a consequent failure of justice. The effect of the section, in my opinion, is that objections which the Appellate or Revisional Court is thereby precluded from allowing must be considered cured for all purposes unless taken before the passing of the decree in the original Court.

The ordinary way of questioning a decree passed without jurisdiction is on appeal or in revision, and if this is forbidden, a Court of first instance cannot in execution do that which the Appellate or Revisional Court is precluded from doing.

In view of the above answers to questions one and two, question three would not arise but for a further question raised by Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar at a late stage of the argument. He contended that, admitting that section 21 applied to suits about immoveable property, it dealt only with the original institution of a suit and not with the prosecution of the suit in a wrong Court after the abolition of the Court in which it had been properly instituted. In support of this contention he relied on the fact that section 21 requires the objection to be taken "in all cases in which issues are settled at or before such settlement" as showing that the section was not intended to apply to an objection, such as the present, which only arose after the settlement of issues on the abolition of the Madura Subordinate Court and could not have been taken at or before such settlement. It is unnecessary to consider whether those particular words may not be read as applying only to cases where it is possible to take the objection at or before the settlement of issues, and whether the words "place of suing" are not wide enough to include objections to the place of prosecuting as well as of instituting suits. Assuming, however, that section 21 does not apply, I am still of opinion that the present decree cannot be questioned in execution. An objection to the jurisdiction is a ground for setting aside the decree and is not one of those questions relating to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree" which are required by section 47, to be dealt with in execution. The provision in section 225 of the old Code that a Court might proceed to execute decrees transferred to it without requiring further proof, among other things, of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree, lent some colour to the view that it was open to a Court to which a decree had been sent for execution to go into the question whether the Court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to do so, and influenced the decisions which are referred to in the Order of Reference. These words, however, have been omitted advisedly in the corresponding Order XXI, rule 7 of the new Code.

Without referring to the statement of Objects and Reasons, which is not permissible, Krishna Ayyangar v Nallaperumal Pillai (12), we may, I think, infer that these words were omitted in the new Code because it was felt that it was not for the executing Court to go into questions of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree, at any rate when, as in the present case, that Court was an ordinary Court in British India governed by the Code. This is the view taken in Hari Govind v. Narsingrao (13) and Kalipada Sarkar v. Hari Mohan Dalal (14) is also a recent authority for the proposition that the Court executing the decree cannot go behind it. I would, therefore, answer the third question in the negative.

A suit for an account against a karta of a joint Hindu family is governed as to limitation by Article 20 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 878, col. 1.]

Inasmuch as section 10 of the Limitation Act applies only where property is vested in trust in a trustee for a specific purpose and as a karta of a Hindu family is not vested with the property belonging to the family, that section has no application to a suit against a karta for an account. [p. 878, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 24 Perganas, dated the 14th January 1918.

Babu Abinash Chunder Ghose, for the Appellant.

Babu Kitaram Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There is no contest now that the plaintiff is entitled to one-sixth share only. As regards the joint family properties, the only question which was raised was in respect of properties Nos. 21, 25 and 27 of Schedule ka to the plaint. We think the learned Subordinate Judge has correctly found that these properties were acquired in the lifetime of defendant No. 1's father, Gobinda, apparently in the benami name of Prosonno Banerjee, with the income of ijmali properties, that, therefore, it must partake of the nature of a joint family estate, and that the plaintiff is entitled to her share therein.

The next question raised before us is as regards the accounts against the defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge has rightly held that for the period of Gobinda's management, the defendant No. 1 — his son — is not liable Gobinda died on 1314. The learned Judge holds, however, that the defendant No. 1 is liable to account from 1314 and relies upon the case of Annamalai Chetty v. Murugasa (1) in which their Lordships say that the relation between the manager of a joint family and the other members of that family is not that of principal and agent but it is much more like that of trustee and cestui que trust ; and he infers from that expression of opinion that section 10 of the Limitation Act governs suits for account against a karta. He has overlooked that section 10 says that the property must be vested in trust in the trustee for a specific purpose; and it has been held in this Court repeatedly that it does not apply to an implied trust, but to an express trust. In no sense can it be said that a karta of a Hindu family is vested with the property belonging to a joint family. There is no express provision in the Limitation Act as regards such suits and it has always been held that Article 120, which provides six years' limitation, applies to such suits. To this extent we vary the decree of the Court below, that is to say, the plaintiff will be entitled to accounts only for a period of six years prior to the institution of the suit.

With this modification, we dismiss the appeal with costs. Taking into account that accounts for more than six years have not been allowed to the plaintiff, we assess the hearing fee at rupees two hundered and fifty only.

Inasmuch as rent under section 53 of the Bengal Tenancy Act falls due on the last day of each quarter of the agricultural year, a suit for rent for a quarter instituted before the expiration of that quarter is premature. [p. 878, col. 2.]

To constitute a valid tender of rent, what must be looked at is, what was tendered by the party in default and not what the party claiming demands; if any interest is due at the time when the tender is made, the tender must include interest. [p. 879, col. 1.]

Under the Bengal Cess Act "annual value" of a tenure is the rental, and the road cess-must be calculated on that at half an anna in the rupee. [p. 878, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—The appellant is the landlord. The first point argued on his behalf is that the lower Appellate Court erred in coming to the conclusion that, so far as his claim for the fourth quarter of the rent of 1324 is concerned, it was premature. In our view, the lower Appellate Court has taken an entirely correct view. It is clear that, under section 53 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, rent is payable in four equal instalments falling due on the last day of each quarter of the agricultural year. The agricultural year begins with Assin and ends with Bhado. Therefore, the rent for the last quarter became due on the 1st of Assin. The suit was, in fact, instituted before the 1st of Assin. Therefore, clearly, so far as the claim for rent for the last quarter is concerned, it was premature.

The second point arises in connection with the road-cess payable by the defendant to the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the only annual value of the defendant's tenure, so far as the present record shows, is the rental and the road-cess must be calculated on that at half an anna in the rupee; and, calculating the road-cess on that principle, the lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that Rs. 14-1-9 is the road-cess payable by the defendant to the plaintiff, as alleged by the defendant himself. This is supported by section 41 of the Cess Act by the definition of "annual value" in section 4 of the Cess Act, and by the forms which are to be found in that Act.

The last point is whether there was a valid tender made by the defendant to the plaintiff. We are of opinion that this question has not been determined by the lower Appellate Court as it should have been. The lower Appellate Court seems to have been of opinion that, as the plaintiff demanded damage and not interest, therefore, the tender was a valid tender by the defendant. The tender must depend on what is tendered by the party in default and not what the party claiming has to say about it. If any interest was in fact due from the defendant to the plaintiff at the time when the tender was made, then, undoubtedly, the tender must include interest. This question has not been determined by the lower Appellate Court. We are of opinion, therefore, that the case must go back for the determination only of this issue, and for the determination of the appeal on the result of this issue. The other issues have duly been determined and will not be re opened.

Costs will abide the result and will be disposed of by the lower Appellate Court.

COUTTS, J.—I agree.

A market franchise or a right to hold a market, conferred by grant from the Crown does not exist in Bengal, nor can such right be acquired by prescription, the right to hold a market being treated as incident to the ownership of land. The proprietor of a market has no monopoly or privilege which is entitled to protection and no immunity from competition and the mere fact that his profits are diminished by the establishment of a market in proximity to his, gives him no remedy at law. [p. 880, col. 2; p. 881, col. 1.]

It is not unlawful for a trader who has habitually used a market for the sale of his goods, to take his goods to another market.

Where an Appellate Court has drawn wrong conclusions of fact from the evidence, the High Court will interfere in second appeal. [p. 882, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 9th October 1917. The plaintiff is the proprietor of a hat known as the Ramchandradi hat, in the sense that the hat is held within a revenue estate belonging to him and that he derives certain profits from it. The Sardar defendants are neighbouring proprietors and, in February, 1 12, they set up a new hat at Gopaldi, within two miles of the plaintiff's hat. There is some controversy as to the details of the circumstances in which the new hat came to be established. The main facts, however, are not in dispute. In the plaintiff's hat, the right of collecting the dues payable by the stall-holders was farmed out to Ijaradars. One of these Ijaradars was Govinda Chandra Dhur. Amongst the people who had stalls were a number of Jugis, or cloth sellers, of whom some are co-defendants with the Sardars in this suit. It appears that the Jugis felt themselves aggrieved because the Ijaradar Govinda was collecting subscriptions for the celebration of the Kali Puja at a rate double the rate which had prevailed in previous years. The Jugis, or some of them, in deputation, went to the plaintiff's Naib, Kausiki Charan Chakraburty, and preferred a complaint. If we accept the plaintiff's version of this part of the case, as we may without the result being affected, the Jugis not only complained of having to pay the subscription demanded from them but also demanded the "dismissal" of the Ijaradar. The Naib having refused to dismiss the Ijaradar, the Jugis, who had previously approached the Sardar defendants, went on the next market day to Gopaldi and began selling their cloths there. That was the origin of the new hat which, like the Ram Chandradi hat, has since been held every Thursday. It is not now disputed that the Sardars did much to encourage traders to come to their market and the result was that their hat flourished with a corresponding diminution in the profits which the plaintiff received from his hat.

In the period following the establishment of the new hat, affairs took the course which they often take in these cases. There were breaches of the peace between the rival parties or, at any rate allegations, of breaches of the peace which led to proceedings in the Criminal Courts in the nature of a preliminary trial of strength. It was not till those proceedings had ended adversely to the plaintiff, or those siding with him, that in November, 1914, he instituted the present suit.

In his plaint the plaintiff alleged a conspiracy between the Sardar defendants and the Jugis, and the employment of illegal means for the purpose of inducing traders to attend the Gopaldi hat and not to attend the Ram Chandradi hat. On this footing, plaintiff claimed damages. He also prayed for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from doing various things. The injunction was to restrain the defendants not only from employing illegal means but also from holding a market or hat on Thursdays or on any other day at Gopaldi or any other place within two miles of the plaintiff's hat.

In the Court below, the learned Subordinate Judge found that the Jugis had in fact approached the Sardars before they began selling their goods at Gopaldi, a finding in the plaintiff's favour which may again be accepted without harm to the defendants. He also found that the Sardar's paons had in fact engaged themselves in persuading people to desert the old hat and attend the new one. He came, however, to the conclusion that there was no combination between the Sardars and the Jugis amounting to an actionable conspiracy, and that the conduct of the Sardars, or their peons, was not wrongful or illegal. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit in toto. The plaintiff has appealed.

Now, I may say at once that there were two points on which we did not think it necessary to call on the learned Counsel for the Sardar defendants for a reply. The first point is the somewhat shadowy claim set up by the plaintiff, that his hat is a very ancient hat and that, on that ground, he is entitled to some special protection. It is true that the hat has existed for a considerable time and it also appears that it is shown on the Revenue Survey Map with the date 1726 below it. Beyond that, however, there are no materials which carry the history of the hat back to the Permanent Settlement and the Subordinate Judge has found that the evidence does not establish that it existed at that time. Even if it had been shown that the hat was in existence in 1793, the case of Rakhal Das Addy v. Durga Sundari Dasi (1) would be a complete answer to the plaintiff's claim. [See also Nanda Kumar v. Emperor (2)]. In this part of India, there appears to be no such thing as a market franchise or a right to hold a market, conferred by grant from the Crown. At any rate, so far as we are aware and as the learned Vakil for the plaintiff has been able to inform us, there is no authority which affirms the existence of such a right and no authority which countenances the acquisition of any such right by prescription.

It might possibly be expedient that markets should be regulated by some system of licensing. But that raises a question of policy which is outside the province of the Courts. In England, it is said, no one can hold a market without a license from the Crown and the reason has been thus stated: "The reason why a market or fair cannot be holden without a grant is not merely for the sake of promoting traffic; commerce, but also, for the like reason as in the Roman Law, for the preservation of order, and prevention of irregular behaviour; Ubi est multitudo, ibi debet esse rector." The words are those of Mr. Justice Wilmot in Rex. v Marsden (3) and they were cited in the House of Lords

(1) 17 C. 458; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 815.
(2) 11 C. W. N 1128; 6 Cr. L. J. 321.
(3) (1765) 3 Burr. 1812; 1 W. Bl. 579; 97 E. R. 1113.

in the case of Hammerton v. Earl of Dysart (4).

In Bengal the right to hold a market is treated as incident to the ownership of land. A proprietor may set up a market in proximity to his neighbour's market without infringing the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. The proprietor of the old market has no monopoly or privilege which is entitled to protection and no immunity from competition [Hammerton v. Earl of Dysart (4).] He has no remedy at law merely because his profits are diminished.

That is not to say, however, that the setting up of a new market in proximity to an old market is not regarded as an unneighbourly act. It almost necessarily leads to friction and sometimes to a state of things which may not inaptly be described as a state of hostilities ending in an appeal first to the Criminal, and then to the Civil Courts.

The second question on which we thought it unnecessary to call on Mr. Byomkesh Chakrabartty concerns this suit as a suit against the Jugi defendants. Here, again, I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge. On the materials before us, I agree that it cannot be said that the Jugis were guilty of any wrongful conduct. They were at liberty to go in deputation to the plaintiff's Naib and complain of conduct on the part of the Ijaradar, Govinda, which they considered harsh and oppressive. They may have gone rather far in asking for the "dismissal" of Govinda but they did nothing to entitle the plaintiff to damages. It was said that it is a wrongful act for one person to induce another to break his contract with a third person, and it was argued that the request made to the Naib, coupled with the Jugis going to the Sardars and arranging for the establishment of a new hat, was evidence that both the Sardars and the Jugis were parties to an actionable conspiracy. The position cannot be sustained. In the first place, there was no breach of any contract between the plaintiff and the Ijaradar, and, secondly, the Ijaradar is not a plaintiff in this suit and claims no damages from the Jugis or any one else. When one man is induced to break his contract with another it is the latter who may have a right to complain. In any case, the question would arise whether the action of the Jugis was justifiable in the circumstances [South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Company (5)]. The request, therefore, made to the Naib gives the present plaintiff no cause of action against the Jugis. So, again, if it was lawful for the Sardars to set up a new hat, any combination between them and the Jugis for that purpose was not in itself unlawful. Finally, it is not shown, or even suggested, that the Jugis were parties to or were in any way concerned in the unlawful conduct attributed to the peons of the Sardars. In my opinion, therefore, as against the Jugis, the suit was properly dismissed and the appeal fails.

There remains the question of the conduct of the peons, which I may state in the words of the Subordinate Judge:—"Whether the Sardar defendants resorted to force, violence or improper threats for preventing people from going to the plaintiff's hat?" In that connection, the plaintiff examined a large number of witnesses. If their evidence be accepted, the methods of inducement employed by the peons were of the cruder kind, including actual physical compulsion or coercion, which come without difficulty within the expressions used in the line of cases from the Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor (6) onwards, to denote illegal methods of carrying out objects which may in themselves be lawful. Now the Subordinate Judge has not entirely disbelieved or rejected the testimony of these witnesses. He has accepted their testimony up to a certain point and he has only disbelieved them when they speak to conduct on the part of the peons which was obviously unlawful. We were taken through the whole of the evidence on this part of the case and it seems to me quite impossible to minimize the force of that large body of evidence. It would take too long to go through the depositions in details. I was specially struck by the evidence of the ferry-man, Hari Majhi, who plies a ferry at Gopaldi and by the evidence of the paddy dealers, Abbas, son of Daya Gazi, and Tomizuddi. There is also the witness Agaraddi who used to sell paddy at the Ramchandradi hat His evidence is of some importance because, if accepted, it corroborates not only the evidence of the ferry man but also the evidence of the plaintiff's Naib, Kausiki Mohan; and the plaintiff's servant, Bhikaram Das. Having heard what both sides had to say on all this evidence I was left with a strong impression that a certain amount of actual physical violence—coercion or compulsion—was in fact used by the peons of the Sardars for the purpose of furthering the interest of their masters, the proprietors of the new hat at Gopaldi.

It was argued for the Sardars that the question was one of fact and that a Court of Appeal should be slow to differ from the trial Court on a question of fact depending on the credibility and veracity of witnesses. No one disputes that as a general proposition. But there are cases where the trial Judge has approached the evidence from a wrong standpoint or has applied to that evidence wrong standards of probability or improbability. If a trial Judge says that a servant speaking for his master ought never to be believed, the Appeal Court is not obliged to accept his estimate of the servant's evidence. In such a case the question is not merely a question of the credibility of the particular witness. The witness has not been given a fair chance. There are verdicts or findings which are contrary to the weight of the evidence. In the present case, as I have said, the learned Subordinate Judge has gone some way towards accepting the evidence of the witnesses. His conclusions are thus stated:—"The Sirdars employed a number of men at the hat and fed them at Hanif's house. It was stated that these men used to keep order at the hat. But from their own witness it was elicited that only two or three of them used to work at the hat. So it may be inferred that the others remained round about the hat for picketing and persuaded people to attend the new hat. But it is not likely that men thus employed on daily wages ran the risk of being hauled up before the Criminal Court by applying force or committing assault; and the evidence as discussed above does not also establish the story of assault." The Subordinate Judge, therefore, finds that the peons were employed, or employed themselves, in picketing for the new market. In the view I take, it is not necessary to consider whether peaceful picketing or the mere accosting of people on the high way in order to recommend and invite them to attend the new market would be an actionable nuisance for which the plaintiff would be entitled to damages. But it is obviously a short step from such picketing to picketing accompanied by coercive or intimidating threats or the use of physical force to pull or push men towards the new market. The Subordinate Judge says that it is improbable that men employed on daily wages would run the risk of being hauled up before the Criminal Court by applying such force. Two of the peons were examined for the Sardars and we have it from both of them, Abu Rahim and Jamir-ud Din, that they get, not daily wages but monthly wages, and I entirely dissent from the Subordinate Judge's view that it is improbable that the peons would resort to any degree of force. On the contrary, it seems to me exceedingly probable that the Sardars' peons would be zealous for their masters and would not be too nice or too scrupulous in the means which they employed. If they were taken before the Magistrate, they would expect their masters to fight their cases for them. On the evidence and in the circumstances, I differ from the learned Subordinate Judge's conclusion, and find that illegal means, in the nature of intimidation and physical compulsion, were employed to induce traders to attend the new hat.

Then, what is the result? The conspiracy between the Jugis and the Sardars alleged by the plaintiff is not established. No conspiracy is charged between the Sardars and the peons, but the Sardars are undoubtedly responsible for the acts of the peons as acts committed within the scope of their employment. The plaint is wide enough to cover a claim against the Sardars for damages on that footing. The acts done were unlawful in themselves. They were not only intended to injure the plaintiffs' hat but such pecuniary injury was their natural consequence and did in fact ensue. One purpose of the law is to prevent persons from attaining lawful ends by unlawful means and, in my opinion, the plaintiff in the present case was so interfered with in the peaceful enjoyment of his hat as to entitle him to a civil remedy by way of a suit for damages. If the contrary be held, the peons might repeat their unlawful acts with impunity. The individuals threatened or molested, provided that no great violence was used, would be slow to take proceedings against influential landowners like the Sardars or against their servants.

As to the amount which the Sardars should be condemned to pay, the Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiff suffered loss to the extent of Rs. 900 a year. Without suggesting that it is possible to fix the damages precisely, I would allow the plaintiff damages at the rate of Rs. 900 a year for the period from February 1912 to November 1914.

As to the claim for an injunction; as the law stands, the plaintiff is certainly not entitled to an injunction restraining the Sardars from holding a hat at Gopaldi or from holding the hat on Thursdays. If the plaintiff had come to the Civil Court earlier, he might have been entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant Sardars and their servants from employing illegal means to prevent attendance at the plaintiffs' hat. The evidence, however, is clear that after 1913, probably after January 1913, no acts of violence were committed by the Sardars or their servants. That being so, the claim for an injunction must be rejected. I am prepared, however, to leave it open to the plaintiff to apply for an injunction if occasion should arise for his doing so in the future.

There remains the question of costs. The appeal will be dismissed as against the Jugi defendants. They have not appeared in this Court and are not entitled, therefore, to any costs here. They are entitled, however, to the costs incurred by them in the Court below. As to the Sardar defendants, the trial has been complicated and lengthened by extravagant claims on the part of the plaintiff. The plaintiff is not entitled to his full costs, either in this Court or in the Court below. I think the reasonable order to make is that the plaintiff should get half his costs from the Sardar defendants in both Courts.

GREAVES, J.—As we are differing from the learned Subordinate Judge on a question of fact, and that after a long and careful trial and the exhaustive judgment, I want to add a few words to the judgment that has just been delivered. As has already been stated, the plaintiff's hat at Ramchandradi was started many years ago and the Subordinate Judge has found that it was in a flourishing condition at the time the rival hat was started bringing in an income of some Rs. 1,200 a year. The defendants' hat was started by the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 in February 1912 and this suit was not instituted until the 18th November 1914. It is, therefore, open to comment that the plaintiff has been guilty of delay in enforcing such civil remedy as he is entitled to. Now, the suit was based on the contention that the hat started by the Sardar defendants at Gopaldi was the result of a conspiracy between themselves and the Jugi defendants to ruin the plaintiff's hat at Ramchandradi. Various reliefs were claimed in the suit, and it is not necessary to refer to them in detail. The defences put forward were that the claim was barred by limitation, that there was no conspiracy established and that the decline of the plaintiffs' hat was due to other reasons than the competition of the hat of the Sardar defendants. The Judge has found that there was no conspiracy, and in this we agree, and it is not necessary to deal with that part of the case. He has also held that no grant of the hat can be inferred and we agree with him in that finding also. He has found that no unlawful means or force was used by the Sardar defendants to prevent the Haturias from attending the plaintiff's hat at Ramchandradi and this is the question which really arises on this appeal. So far as the defence is concerned, the question of limitation has not been pressed before us and Counsel for the respondents admitted that the date of the discontent which induced the Jugi defendants to leave Ramchandradi was not the time of Durga Puja but the time of Kali Puja. So no question of limitation really arises. The lower Court has also found in favour of the plaintiff that the decline of his hat was not due to the causes alleged by the defendants but to the competition of the hat established by the defendants Nos. 1 to 6. There are one or two passages in the judgment of the lower Court to which I think reference can be made. The first passage will be found at page 515 of the printed paper-book, Volume II. The learnad Subordinate Judge says, "There can be no doubt that the plaintiff has suffered substantial loss in consequence of the establishment of the new hat. The primary cause of the break up was no doubt the discontent among the traders originating in the oppressive and unsympathetic conduct of the plaintiff's Ijaradars and officers, but it is certain that, unless a new hat had been established, the traders, though smarting under a sense of injustice, would have continued to attend the hat." Then, at page 522, occurs this passage:—"The Sardar defendants established the new hat with the co operation of the Jugi defendants who assured them that they would attend the new hat in preference to the plaintiff's hat" Then the Judge found that there was no proof of pressure so far as the Jugis we concerned or any improper conduct on their part. Then comes the following passage at page 538:—"The only question to be decided now is, whether the Sardar defendants resorted to force violence or improper threats for preventing people from going to the plaintiff's hat." At pages 540 and 541, the learned Judge states his reasons for arriving at the conclusion that there was no violence or threat used by the Sardars. He says that these defendants used persuasion or offered favourable terms, that there was picketing about the hat to persuade people to attend the new hat and that, upon the evidence, the story of assault is not established. At page 545 he expresses his doubt that the Sardars would have been able by forcible means to have kept away from the plaintiff's hat some five or six thousand people and at page 550 he states his conclusion that it has been satisfactorily established that there was no other cause for the break up of the plaintiff's hat except the discontent of the traders and the persuasion used by the defendants. The last passage to which I desire to refer is to be found at page 552 and it runs as follows:—"At the present time the Sardar defendants are not adopting very proper methods to secure attendance to their hat." Therefore, the only question that really arises is whether the Judge was right in the conclusion which he drew from the evidence, namely, that there was no force or violence or illegal means employed by the Sardar defendants to induce people to attend their hat in preference to attending the hat at Rameshandradi. In the judgment that has just been delivered, the evidence has been carefully considered. There are a very large number of witnesses examined in the case on this point. Their evidence was referred to by the learned Vakil who appeared for the appellant and it was again referred to by the learned Counsel who appeared for the Sardar defendants. Some comment was made with regard to these witnesses that many of them were either servants or tenants under the plaintiff and that their evidence must be discounted on this score. But, even apart from this, it appears to me that there is a considerable body of evidence, in support of the plaintiff's case, namely, that of Karan Ali, Abad Ali, Abbas and Tomizuddi who, as far as we can see, are independent witnesses and, again, so far as the boatman whose evidence has already been referred to, namely, Hari Majhi, is concerned, although he is a tenant of the plaintiff, he is on his own evidence, receiving a pay of Rs. 40 a year from the Sardar defendants for ferrying people to the hat at Gopaldi. It seems to me, therefore, that it is impossible to throw aside, as the learned Subordinate Judge has done, this large body of evidence and to say, in face of the fact that admittedly a considerable number of persons were employed by the Sardar defendants not merely for keeping order in the hat itself but for the purpose of picketing or persuading people to go to their hat, that there was no force or violence used more than was justifiable by the Sardar defendants. It does not seem to me that we are really differing from the Subordinate Judge in any finding with regard to the credibility of the witnesses who appeared before him; but we are rather differing from the conclusion that he has drawn from the evidence with regard to the force or violence used in the case. Speaking for myself, upon the evidence which has been referred to, I fail to see how it is possible to arrive at the conclusion that there was not a certain amount of force or violence used by the Sardar defennants. That being so, the only question that arises is whether damages have been suffered by the plaintiff and this the learned Subordinate Judge has found. The other question that arises is whether, upon such facts, a civil remedy is open to the plaintiff in the suit. Mr. Chakraburty on behalf of the respondents has argued that the only remedy under circum stances of this kind which is open to the plaintiff is a resort to the Criminal Court and he has referred us to various criminal cases that were instituted on both sides. I should be very loath to come to the conclusion that when one has a right to property of the nature of a hat and when force or violence or illegal means are used for preventing people from coming to that hat by the rival hat owner, there is no remedy in the Civil Court either by way of damages or by way of injunction. We have been referred, in the course of this case, to various English cases many of which are complicated so far as this case is concerned by the fact that they relate to trade disputes. The latest case in which the various cases are discussed is the case of Pratt v. British Medical Association (7), Mr. Justice McCardie considered there all the cases of actionable conspiracy and so on that had been dealt with by the English Courts. I read from his judgment at page 260 in which he states as follows:— "The true principle of the common law had, I think, already been indicated in Garret v. Taylor (8) and Tarleton v. M'Gawley (9), and the incident of conspiracy seems to add nothing of direct juristic relevance to that principle. In my opinion, the rule of law is reasonably clear that a single person, or a body of persons, will commit an actionable wrong if he or they inflict actual pecuniary damage upon another by the intentional employment of unlawful means to injure that person's business even though the unlawful means may not comprise any specific act which is per se actionable." We were also referred to the case of Lyons & Sons v. Wilkins (10). There Lord Justice Chitty in delivering his judgment stated that "the acts of watching or besetting here proved in reference to the 4th sub section and done with the view mentioned were acts in themselves unlawful at common law and are not made lawful by the Legislature. In my opinion they constitute a nuisance at common law." It will, therefore, appear that, according to the doctrine of common law, apart from violence, mere besetting or watching may by itself be actionable. I think there is some force, however, in the argument that Mr. Chakraburty has addressed to us as to the application of the principles of a case of this kind to the present case. There, there was a trade dispute. Here, it is a dispute between two rival hat owners; and the question is whether a rival hat owner is justified in inducing people by means of persuasion to attend his market or shop and to dissuade people from attending the market or shop of the rival owner. There is no doubt that he can do so and the only difficulty arises when the line is overstepped and force and unlawful means are adopted as, I think, has happened in the present case. I have nothing more to add except that I agree with the conclusion of my learned brother as to the measure of damages and the order which he has made with regard to the costs of the case.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 806 OF 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Spencer.

THE SUPERINTENDING ENGINEER, 2ND CIRCLE, BEZWADA—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

CHITTURI RAMAKRISHNAYYA AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 80—Public Officer, suit against, for act done in official capacity—Notice, whether necessary—"Act," meaning of.

In the absence of a notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code a suit will not lie against a public officer in respect of any act purported to be done by him in his official capacity. [p. 889, col. 1; p. 890, col. 2.]

The term "act" in section 80 includes a threat to do a future injurious action when that threat is conveyed through the performance of any action, such as speech, writing, sending a notice or message and so forth. [p. 888, col. 2; p. 890, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in Appeal Suit No. 51 of 1918, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of that place, in Original Suit No. 590 of 1916, SUPERINTENDING ENGINEER, BEZWADA v. CHITTURI RAMAKRISHNAYYA.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Government Pleader, (Mr. V. Ramesam), for the Appellant.—The lower Courts erred in granting the permanent injunction from the mere fact that the public worshipped the image in the site belonging to Government. No customary right can be acquired in respect of another person's property. Even if such a right can legally exist, there is no proof here of long user of the right by the villagers, nor that the worship was so open as to constitute a customary right. The lower Courts have confused customary rights with customary easements. Palaniandi Tevan v. Puthirangonda Nadan (1), relied on by the Subordinate Judge, is a case of customary easement. Continued worship of an object standing on another man's property cannot create a customary right.

Next, the suit does not lie for want of notice required by section 80. The section does not except suits for injunction. It may be a hardship and will prevent immediate relief being obtained in cases of urgency, but that is a matter for the Legislature. See Secretary of State v. Kalekhan (2) and Samanthala Koti Reddi v. Pothuri Subbiah (3).

Mr. P. Narayanamurthy, for the Respondents.—The plaintiff is only seeking to enforce a customary right. Such rights are recognized in section 2 (b) of the Easements Act. Long continued worship of an object situate in another man's property with the knowledge and without the dissent of the latter will create a customary right.

As the suit is for an injunction, notice is not necessary under section 80, Civil Procedure Code, where the relief claimed is injunction, and the withholding of that relief by a Rule nisi in the first instance will cause irreparable injury, notice is unnecessary under the section. Again, the suit is not for any act done by the defendant but for a threatened injury. To such a case section 80, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendant, who is described in the plaint as a Government Officer, (namely, the Superintending Engineer, 2nd Circle, D. P. W., residing at Bezawada) is the appellant before us.

This suit for injunction (among other reliefs) was brought against him because (according to the plaint) the defendant in his official capacity attempted to remove a dilapidated Ganapathi Image, which had been placed on a site which has been found by the lower Appellate Court to belong to the Government. The image itself also has been found by that Court to belong to the Government. The Court, however, found (see paragragh 13 of its judgment), (1) that some sort of worship was being done to the said idol for a long time, even when the idol lay half buried in the ground, it having been raised up and placed on a platform only in 1915; (2) that to establish a customary right, it was not necessary that there should be enjoyment for over 20 years or the like. The lower Court further said, "even supposing that the enjoyment claimed does not go so far back as to 1872 or 1873, still, I am of opinion, on the evidence on record, that there was sufficient enjoyment for the acquisition of the customary right by the plaintiffs" that is the right to worship the idol at the place where it now stands. On these grounds the lower Appellate Court confirmed the permanent injunction granted by the District Munsif. Several grounds have been taken in the memorandum of second appeal; but I shall deal with only three of them, namely, grounds Nos. 7, 10 and 11.

"7. The Courts below ought to have held that the suit is barred for want of notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. The cases relied on by the lower Appellate Court do not apply and are not correctly decided."

"10. The lower Appellate Court erred in finding that the so called customary right of the plaintiffs is made out."

"11. There cannot be such a custom as is set up by the plaintiff. There is no legal evidence in support of the custom set up. The finding of the lower Appellate Court in paragraph 13 of its judgment is unintelligible."

I shall deal, shortly, with grounds Nos. 10 and 11. I shall not go into the question whether a customary right in the Hindu public to worship an idol belonging to a third person, and placed on a site belonging to that third person, can be legally acquired or proved, as my mind is not quite made up on that point. Assuming that such a customary right can be proved by the fact that the owner of the site and of the idol had allowed such worship to be carried on for a sufficiently long time by the Hindu public, I am clear that the proof required by the Courts, especially where the owner of the site and the idol is not a Hindu must be very clear and strong. (The Government being neutral in religion is of course not Hindu in religion.) The length of time must be considerable and the acts of worship must be very open and such as clearly indicate to the owner that the worshippers have claimed the right to carry on the worship openly and as a customary right. Paragraph 13 of the lower Court's judgment is vague and indefinite. It does not set out the particular acts of worship, or the length of the enjoyment of the alleged right or whether the acts were such as to give notice to the Government that the worship was carried on, as of right. The District Munsif finds (see page 13, line 40 of the printed papers) that it was in July 1915 that the platform for the idol was erected, evidently by the D. P. W. itself, and that the image which had been lying half buried was raised up and placed on the platform. The site of the idol had, therefore, been changed at least vertically. P. W. No. 2 himself says in September 1917; "During the last 2 or 3 years worship is being carried on, on a "grand scale." Before that, according to Exhibit I, cocoanuts used to be broken before the half buried Ganesa, by passing worshippers. Such worship is even done to peepul and margosa trees standing on District Board roads and Municipal roads by some devout Hindus and it would be dangerous to hold that the Municipality or the District Board is not entitled to cut them down, if such cutting is required to widen the roads or for any other lawful purpose. I shall, however, not express any final opinion on this matter and, even if it is necessary to come to a conclusion on this point, I should hesitate to accept the vague finding of the lower Appellate Court, on the necessary facts to be proved and would call for a more detailed and definite finding, as to the times, places, nature, extents and qualities of the acts of worship. As to the length of the enjoyment required for the acquisition of a customary right (also loosely called "customary easement"), I remarked recently "that though no period is mentioned in the Limitation Act for the acquisition by the public of a customary right by long enjoyment, Courts will be well-advised if they require at least 20 years' uninterrupted and acquiesced enjoyment to establish such a customary right in the public, the owner having knowledge of such an enjoyment (See Second Appeal No. 722 of 1919).

(1) 20 M. 389; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 277.
(2) 16 Ind. Cas. 947; 37 M. 113; (1912) M. W. N. 786; 23 M. L. J. 181; 12 M. L. T. 224.
(3) 46 Ind. Cas. 86; 41 M. 792; 7 L. W. 586; 34 M. L. J. 494; 23 M. L. T. 357; (1918) M. W. N. 414.

Again, it appears from Exhibit III (b), paragraphs Nos. 3 and 4, that the image of Ganesa had gone out of the proper form, which the Agamas required for an image of one of the higher 5 deities, namely, Sun, Ambika, Vishnu, Ganesa and Maheswara to form an appropriate object of public worship. Paragraph 3 says: "further we have not got any kind of Dharmakartaship to the said stone image. We propose repairing the same as an act of charity to give proper form to the said image. Therefore, we do not possess any kind of right. We, therefore, pray for orders, to repair the same.

"Further, by the words 'please to consider' we mean repairing only these, namely, the trunk, eyes, sacred thread, hands, ears, legs, etc."

In fact, it appears from the documentary evidence that a new trunk had to be 'provided' for the idol. It is an arguable question whether an image like this, which had been buried long under the earth and which was found in an excavation which was touched by other religionists and which belonged evidently to a Siva temple probably destroyed by Mussalman invaders can be claimed by a Hindu as an object of temple worship, till it is properly repaired and Ashtabandhanam ceremony according, to Agamas, is performed for it. However, as I said, I shall decide this particular suit merely on the question of notice alone under section 80, Civil Procedure Code.

On this question of notice, I have expressed my opinion strongly in the case reported in Secretary of State v. Kalekhan (2). That case was no doubt a case where the defendant was the Secretary of State in Council and not a public officer as in this case. The Full Bench case in Samanthala Koti Reddi v. Pothuri

Subbiah (3) in which both of us took part was a case against a Village Munsif, acting as a public officer. In the above two cases, it was held that section 80 should be strictly complied with by a plaintiff who brings any kind of suit against the Secretary of State or who brings a suit against a public officer in respect of any act purported to be done by the said public officer in his official capacity. In the present case it is admitted that the two months' notice mentioned in the section was not given to the Superintending Engineer. It was, however, argued, on the strength of some English decisions, that where the relief claimed is one by way of injunction or where irreparable injury is likely to be caused if a rule nisi for an injunction is not at once granted, the notice required by the section was unnecessary. I expressed my dissent from those cases in Secretary of State v. Kalekhan (2), and I have nothing to add to what I then said. No doubt, I confined my remarks to the case of a suit against the Secretary of State and added, as regards the argument based on irreparable injury, that "if a suit against the public officer alone for an injunction could be brought without notice (a position on which I reserve my opinion) no irreparable injury to the plaintiff would be caused" if he took certain steps. Thus, it is clear that I did reserve my opinion on that point and did not mean to express any opinion to the effect that there was a distinction on this point between the case where the suit is brought for an injunction against the Secretary of State and the case where a suit is brought against a public officer for an act done in his official capacity. I do not think that any such distinction can be supported on the language of the Code. If serious hardship be sustained by a plaintiff in some cases on the strict language of the section, the proper course is to appeal to the Legislature to enact an exception to section 80 to the following effect:—"where, in the opinion of the Court, irreparable injury might be caused to the plaintiff, if the notice required by the section is insisted upon, as a preliminary to the entertainment of the suit, the Court may entertain the suit without such preliminary notice. In such a case it shall allow the defendant at least two months from the date of the service of the summons for his appearance to answer the claim, in case the summons had been served within two months before the date fixed in the summons for his appearance."

It was finally argued by the respondent that the suit was brought not for an act done by the Engineer, defendant, but for a threatened act, and, therefore, section 80, does not apply. I entirely agree with the judgment just now pronounced by my learned brother that a threat to do a future injurious act, when the threat is conveyed through the performance of an act, such as speech, writing, sending a notice or message, and so on, is also within the intention of the Legislature, when it uses the word "act" in section 80. "Acts" are performed according to Indian philosophical notions, by the body, by the ten senses and by the mind (the eleventh sense) though only five of the sense are especially called Karmendriyas. [Two of the latter, namely, (1) 'hand', and (2) 'foot' include all muscular exertions, (1) involving motion not involving change of place of the body as a whole; and (2) involving locomotion]. Modern legal tribunals and modern law are loth to attach liabilities to a wrongful act, which is not accompanied by physical motion or physical sound or direct physical feeling which can be perceived by an ordinary man. Though it is said that even a cat can look with impunity on a king, it may be that as the law develops, even a Gnanendriya act, such as, (say looking at the plaintiff in an insolent or threatening manner) will be held by Courts to give a cause of action for damages. There is a conflict of opinion in American Courts whether mere nervous shock caused to the plaintiff (without any apparent external injury), resulting from a wrongful act, gives rise to a cause of action. Spoken words of slander did not, according to the English Common Law, give rise to a cause of action, except in a limited class of cases; but this Court extended the law of slander in Parvathi v. Mannar (4). I am not sure that with the spread among a considerable body of humanity of mesmeric (or as it is now called hypnotic) and other powers (now abnormal) among mankind, and of the spread of evil influences (even though concealed from ordinary sense perceptions) exercised by such powers, the law may not be obliged to recognise injuries caused by the wrongful activities of the Gnanendriyas and even of the mind Indria. To come back from these remote (though interesting) speculations to the present case, paragraph 5 of the plaint in this case states that the cause of action arose when the defendant threatened to remove the image and the pandal. It is not denied that the threat was not a mere mental act, which the plaintiff had learnt by telepathy. The written statement states that final orders were passed by the defendant in August 1916, for the removal of the image and the pandal. It is not denied that the order was a signed and a written order and was communicated to the plaintiffs, by a perceivable physical act or physical acts done by the defendant or by the agents of the defendant and that that was the threat which gave rise to the plaintiff's cause of action. I, therefore, hold that section 80, Civil Procedure Code, is applicable to the suit.

In the result I agree that the decrees of the lower Courts should be set aside and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

SPENCER, J.—This suit was brought by two traders residing at Bezwada, against the Superintending Engineer, D. P. W., II Circle, to obtain an injunction prohibiting him from removing the stone image of Ganesa situated on the canal bank by the side of the Hyderabad road in Bezwada and from otherwise interfering with it or with the pandal over it. The prayer in respect of the pandal was refused and requires no consideration by us. An injunction was granted by the District Munsif and, on appeal, his judgment was confirmed by the Temporary Subordinate Judge, and the defendant now appeals.

As above stated, the subject of the suit is a stone idol representing God Vinayakar or Ganesa, the history of which appears in the judgments of the lower Courts. This appears to have been discovered when the main channel of the Kistna water works was widened in the year 1872 or 1873. It was placed in its present position by the Public Works Department, as an ornament to the wall and has since become an object of worship to persons who trade along the canal in boats and to passers by. In 1915, (i. e., only one year before suit) a platform was built and also a temporary pandal was erected on festival occasions, with the permission of the Public Works Department, or the Municipality or both.

The District Munsif found that the idol and the site occupied by it belonged to the public, who had acquired a right to it, by continuous worship for a very long time and he, therefore, held that the plaintiffs had a right to worship it and were entitled to the injunction prayed for. The Subordinate Judge found that both the idol and the site were the property of the Government and he rightly rejected the pleas advanced on behalf of the plaintiffs that the idol itself had acquired a right to the site by the adverse possession. This claim seems to have been advanced upon the strength of the theory that an idol is a juridical person capable of holding property. The idea that an inanimate block of stone is capable of exercising personal rights of property is of course absurd ; but, as pointed out in Mr. Ganapathy Aiyar's Religious Endowments, the theory is based on the idea that it is really the deity that resides in the image and that it is the deity and not the image that is the juridical person. Mr. Ganapathy Aiyar observes, at page 40, that it is only in an ideal sense the property can belong to an idol and the possession and management must, in the nature of things, be entrusted to some person as a shebait or manager. In the present case, there is no manager or trustee for the suit image.

The Subordinate Judge based his finding for the plaintiffs upon the view that they had acquired a customary right to worship the idol at the place where it now stands and he has supported his opinion by a reference to Palanicndi Tevar v. Puthirangonda Nadan (1). That was a case where certain persons residing in a particular village were held to be entitled to the use of the water of a certain well, by being in possession of houses in that village and residing therein. It was thus a case of a customary easement. The right of taking water is a well known customary right recognised by law. (See Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 10, paragraph 454). But I am not aware of any instance where it has been held that any interest or right of management in the property of another can be acquired by continued acts of worship being shown to that property. It would be a dangerous doctrine to hold that a tree or stone standing in private premises could become subject to the control of the public or of any particular individual, by the mere circumstance of acts of worship being performed by persons who see in that object the abode of a deity. Of course, public rights of way may be acquired by access to such an object being left unobstructed for 20 years. But it is not a right of way that is claimed in this suit. Nor does this image fall within the scope of endowments, as it is not a mosque, temple or religious establishment mentioned in section 14 of Act XX of 1863. I am, therefore, unable to see what right of action the plaintiffs had to bring this suit.

Mr. Narayanamurthy for the respondents tried to bring the plaintiff's suit under the heading of a customary right. Customary rights are mentioned in section 2, clause (b) of the Indian Easements Act. They are distinguished from easements in that they may be possessed by the public, or by any person irrespective of any other immoveable property; whereas an easement is always appurtenant to a dominant heritage. It is conceded that this is not a case of an easement; nor does it fall within the class of profits a prendre as there are no profits to be enjoyed in connection with the worship of the image. Nor does the plaintiffs' suit come under the heading of a claim to a religious office, as there is no religious duty to be discharged in connection with the image.

It is found by the Subordinate Judge that the image is the property of the Government whose servant the defendant is. If an idol is not attached to some public institution or religious foundation, it must be the private property of some one owning the same. (See page 41 of Ganapathy Aiyar's Religious Endowments.) There is no other kind of property in an idol known to law. The idol itself is caput mortum. Property dedicated to an idol and property endowed for religious purposes is res sacra extra commercium (not subject to alienation). Here we have no endowment, no dedication within the memory of man; nothing but a carved block of stone without even walls, or a site to form a shrine for it. This is not one of those not uncommon cases of an interference with a general right of worship in which a particular person is prevented from worshipping at some temple or shrine by his fellow worshippers. As the plaintiffs have failed to establish that they have acquired any interest in the subject of the suit, such as would give them a right of control and disposal over it, and as they have not shown how they are personally injured by any act or threatened act of the defendant, I am of opinion that their suit should be dismissed.

The suit is also bad, in my opinion, owing to the failure of the plaintiffs to give notice as required by section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. An attempt has been made to justify this failure, on the ground that this is a suit based not on any act done by the defendent, but to prevent an act threatened to be done by him and reliance is placed on an observation in Secretary of State v. Kalekhan (2), made by my learned brother, where he assumed, for purposes of argument, that a suit may be brought against a public officer to obtain an injunction without notice. But he did not decide that notice was unnecessary; in fact, he reserved his opinion on that point. It is clear, to my mind, that notice under the above section of the Code is necessary when a suit is instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, or against the public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity; and I understand "act" in this context as including words, spoken or written, which may cause the plaintiff to apprehend some injury in the future. If there was no such act, it is not clear what ground the plaintiffs had to anticipate a threatened invasion of their supposed right, so as to give an occasion for instituting this suit for an injunction. I would, therefore, allow this appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI.—The suit which has given rise to these appeals was brought in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of Biswan, in the Province of Oudh, on the 4th May 1914, for the redemption of a mortgage executed on the 26th September 1881, by one Musammat Bhaga, the mother of Qazi Ramzan Ali, the first plaintiff. The two other plaintiffs are Qazi Ramzan Ali's sons. The defendant in the suit isthe son and representative of the original mortgagee.

The allegations in the plaint were directed to show that the mortgagor, Musammat Bhaga, was an illiterate parda-nashin "village woman," incapable of understanding business, and that she executed the mortgage without a comprehension of the nature of the deed. It was also urged that the rate of interest and the conditions embodied in the mortgage-deed were hard, penal and intended to defeat the right of redemption. And the plaintiffs contend that they were entitled to redeem the property on payment of only the principal amount.

Admittedly, at the time of the mortgage, Ramzan Ali had no interest in the property mortgaged ; he was evidently joined in the deed at the instance of the mortgagee by way of precaution. Qazi Ramzan Ali alleges that, at the time of the execution of the deed, he was only sixteen years of age and had no knowledge of business.

The defendant, in his written statement, denied the allegations relating to the incapacity of the lady to enter into the transaction, and alleged that the amount due on the mortgage was considerably more than the sum which the plaintiffs offered for redemption. He contended that he was entitled to interest upon the bond from the time of the mortgage in addition to the rents and profits of the mortgaged lands. The material part of the written statement may be given in the defendant's own words:—

"The condition is that after the expiry of thirty years at the time of redemption, interest shall be paid along with the principal at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem;" and he contended that this meant the payment of interest should begin from the time of the execution of the deed; he thus claimed Rs. 4,500 on account of principal, and Rs. 17,685 on account of interest up to the 26th June 1914.

The Subordinate Judge who tried the case in the first instance quoted in his judgment the words of the deed, which, it is not disputed, substantially represent the meaning of the passage in the vernacular. He held, upon the construction of the stipulation, that the intention of the parties was that interest should begin to run after the expiration of thirty years. In coming to this conclusion he relied upon the covenant that the mortgagee was, during his possession of the property, to enjoy its rents and profits ; and he considered that it could not possibly have been intended that, whilst he was receiving the usufruct, he was also to be entitled to claim interest. He accordingly decreed the plaintiffs' claim in the following terms:—

"The plaintiffs are entitled to redeem the mortgaged property in suit on payment of Rs. 4,500 (principal) plus Rs. 1,620 on account of interest thereon from the 26th September 1911, till the 26th September 1914 (three years), total Rs. 6,120, together with future interest on Rs. 4,500 from the 26th September 1914, till payment at the aforesaid rate."

As the value of the property in dispute was below Rs. 5,000 both parties appealed to the District Judge of Sitapur and both parties urged before him the same contentions as in the Court below: the defendant claimed interest from the date of the mortgage irrespective of the rents and profits of the property, whilst the plaintiffs urged that no interest should be allowed to the mortgagee, as the stipulation was penal and unconscionable; they further alleged it was not proved that the document had been properly executed by Musammat Bhaga.

The District Judge agreed with the lower Court in holding that the liability for interest arose on the stipulation after the expiry of thirty years. He also concurred in the Subordinate Judge's view that no ground had been established for holding that the mortgage had been executed by Musammat Bhaga without a proper comprehension of its terms. He accordingly dismissed both the appeals and affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

From these decrees both parties appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner; the defendant again raised the same ground on which he had failed in the Courts below, viz., that he was entitled, in addition to the usufruct, to interest from the date of the mortgage, and he contended that the Subordinate Judge, as well as the District Judge, had put a wrong construction upon the terms of the deed; whilst the plaintiffs urged that they ought not to be made liable for any interest.

The Judicial Commissioners came to the conclusion that, as the language of the stipulation was equivocal, they were not prepared to say the construction put upon it by the Courts below was wholly unwarranted. But, upon an examination of the practise of money lenders in the Sitapur District, they expressed their view on the point in question in the following terms:— "We are inclined to consider that the words 'after thirty years' refer to and qualify the term of redemption and not the time from which the payment of interest is to be calculated." Upon an examination, however, of the evidence relating to the execution of the document they were of opinion that advantage had been taken by the mortgagee of the illiteracy of the woman and her want of knowledge to obtain her consent to a stipulation which was by no means clear and was certainly harsh. They said that a covenant of such a character taken from persons, one of whom was a boy of tender years, and the other a parda-nashin lady in a position more or less of subordination to the mortgagee, without it having been fully explained to her and without any opportunity for independent advice, could not be legally enforced even if it were otherwise legally valid. They accordingly allowed the appeal of the plaintiffs and dismissed that of the defendant, and made a declaration in the following terms: —

That the plaintiffs are "entitled to redeem the mortgaged property on payment of Rs. 4,500 with the costs incurred by the defendant in the Court of first instance, within six months from this date. In case of default the mortgaged property will be liable to sale."

The defendant has appealed to this Board from both these decrees, and the two appeals have been consolidated. The defendant has again urged that the stipulation in the mortgage deed bound the mortgagor to pay interest from the date of the mortgage.

Their Lordships agree with the lower Courts in India in holding that the condition to pay interest only came into force on the expiry of the thirty years. The fact that the property was to remain in the possession of the mortgagee through the whole of this period, and that he was to enjoy the rents and profits, leaves no room for doubt as to the meaning of the stipulation and the intention of the parties. The plaintiffs, on their side, have strongly contended that, having regard to the position of the lady, her incapacity to understand the transaction, and the absence of clear evidence that she executed it intelligently, and with sufficient comprehension of the nature of the stipulation, the condition as to interest should not be enforced. They accordingly ask that the decree made in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner may not be altered. Their Lordships have given their serious consideration to this argument. They fully recognise the force of the learned Judicial Commissioners' observations that every protection should be given to parda-nashin ladies, and that the proof required from persons who have entered into transactions with parda nashin ladies, and seek to enforce those transactions against them, should be adequate and satisfactory. Had the stipulation as to interest in the present case borne the meaning for which the defendant contended, it would certainly, in their Lordships' opinion, have pointed to the conclusion that Bhaga agreed to it without sufficient comprehension of its nature. But it does not bear that meaning. It is a contract to pay interest at a certain rate after the expiry of the period of the mortgage. Such a contract does not appear to be one which the lady could not understand. She appears to have had the advice of her son in-law on the occasion, and the first two Courts, in holding that she executed the mortgage with a full comprehension of the transaction, relied on the fact that she did owe debts which were paid off with monies advanced on the mortgage; and no question was raised against the transaction in the lifetime of Bhaga. On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the decree of the Subordinate Judge was in accord with the equities of the case, and that it should be restored.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty to discharge the decrees of the Judicial Commissioners and to restore that of the Court of first instance, but they desire to make in addition the following declaration: that the defendant shall not be entitled to interest during the pendency of the appeals from the judgments and decrees of the Subordinate Judge, the District Judge and the Judicial Commissioners. The case has been hung up by his persistence in asserting an unwarrantable claim to interest from the inception of the mortgage.

Their Lordships do not think that it would be justifiable to allow him interest for this period. The decree of the Subordinate Judge gave him interest up to the time of his decree and he would be entitled to that amount.

The case will go back to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner for remission to the Subordinate Judge to give effect to His Majesty's directions, and the interest will run from the date of his order in that behalf. The first Court will fix the usual time for redemption and make the consequential decree. The parties should bear their own costs in the Appellate Courts in India and before this Board.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 838 AND 839 OF 1919.

BANKER SANKARALINGAM AIYER—DEFENDANT No. 4—RESPONDENT IN S. A. No. 838 OF 1919

S. D. SANKARALINGAM AIYER AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF, AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 2—RESPONDENTS IN S. A. No. 839 OF 1919.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 5, 6—"Bank", meaning of—Government Treasury receiving money from District Board, whether "Bank"—Madras Local Boards Act (V Mad. of 1884), ss 144, 147—Madras Local Fund Code, r. 549—District Board, power of, to make negotiable instruments—Bill of exchange—Unconditional order on Treasury by District Board for payment, whether bill of exchange.

The word "bank" connotes the business of utilising money received for purposes of profit. The mere fact that a Government Treasury receives money from a District Board and respects orders issued to it for payment does not constitute the Treasury a Bank, nor can the District Board be regarded as a customer. [p. 895, col. 1.]

An instrument in writing containing an unconditional order made and signed by a District Board, directing the Treasury to pay a certain sum of money to, or to the order of, a specified person, is a bill of exchange which the Board is empowered to make under sections 144 to 147 of the Madras Local Boards Act, read with rule 549 of the Local Fund Code. [p. 895, cols. 1 & 2; p. 896, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court, Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suits Nos. 87 of 1919 and 115 of 1919, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Trichinopoly, in Original Suits Nos. 52 of 1916 and 483 of 1916, respectively.

RANGASWAMI PILLAI v. SANKARALINGAM AIYER.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—The Government Treasury is not a Bank on which cheques could be issued under section 6 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The idea underlying a Bank is the making of profit as a commercial venture. See Foley v. Hill (1). The Treasury makes no profit as and in the course of mercantile banking business. It is intended for the deposit of moneys lodged by public offices. The District Board had no right to issue a negotiable instrument to 2nd defendant and the endorsement by the latter to 4th defendant is invalid. Fourth defendant is not a holder in due course.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopala Chari, for the Respondents.—The Treasury is a Bank. From the very facts that it utilises the deposits it makes some kind of profit. Besides, the expression should not be narrowly construed, and limited to mercantile business as such. Any person who receives another's moneys and pays it to his order must be taken to be a banker within the meaning of the Negotiable Instruments Act. In the order issued by the District Board, all elements which constitute a bill of exchange are present. There is an unconditional order for payment signed by the maker. Under sections 144 to 147 of the Local Boards Act, Local Boards are empowered to issue, endorse and accept negotiable instruments.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree with the judgment which my learned brother is about to deliver. I desire only to add that it is probably impossible and, for the purpose of the present case, is unnecessary to give an exhaustive definition of the terms "bank" or "banker" and that, in agreeing with my learned brother's observations, I do not desire to commit myself to any.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 52 of 1916 is a contractor under the District Board of Trichinopoly. The plaintiff obtained a decree against him. He attached a certain amount of money in the hands of the District Board Engineer on the allegation that the money belonged to the 1st defendant. Thereupon the 2nd defendant put in a claim petition on the 16th October 1914. His claim was allowed. On the 17th October 1914, the plaintiff brought the present suit (Original Suit No. 52 of 1916) for a declaration that he is entitled to attach the money as belonging to the 1st defendant. He obtained an injunction on the 20th October 1914. It was served on the District Treasury of Trichinopoly on the 22nd. On the very same day, without knowledge of the injunction, a cheque was issued to the 2nd defendant. He endorsed it over on the 23rd October to the 4th defendant, who was a banker. Subsequently, the money was paid to the 4th defendant on his undertaking to return it in case the plaintiff succeeded in the suit. Plaintiff succeeded before the District Munsif, but that judgment was reversed by the District Judge. He has preferred this second appeal.

The main question for consideration is, whether the 4th defendant is a holder in due course. To decide this question we have to see what the position of the Treasury is with reference to the District Board of Trichinopoly. In form, the order which directed the payment of money to the 2nd defendant is a cheque. If it is a cheque, there can be no doubt it can be negotiated. The learned Vakil for the appellant contended that as the Treasury is not a Bank, it was not competent to the District Board Engineer to issue a cheque on it under section 6 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Mr. Sreenivasa Gopala Chariar contended that the Treasury is a Bank within that section. After giving careful consideration to the question, I have come to the conclusion that the Treasury is not a Bank. Many of the Judges in England have felt considerable difficulty in defining a Bank. Lord Brougham, in Foley v. Hill (1), mentions certain characteristics of a Bank. In the view of the noble and learned Lord, the element of making a profit by the business must exist in such cases. The case nearest in point is Halifax Union v. Wheelwright (2). In that case Baron Cleasby, delivering the judgment of the Court, expressed himself thus, at page 193: "First, it was said that, taking that Statute together with several other Statutes on the same subject, the word 'banker' was not to be restricted to persons regularly engaged in the business of banking; but that any person who receives the money of another into his charge and according to the course of business between them, pays it out by having drafts drawn upon him payable to order, ought to be considered a banker within that enactment. We cannot accede to that argument." The present case is, practically, identical with the one decided by the Exchequer Court. The definition attempted by Mr. Hart in his Book on the "Law of Banking," namely, that "A banker is one who, in the ordinary course of his business, honours cheques drawn upon him by persons from and for whom he receives monies on current accounts", indicates that the business must have a commercial side to it. The mere fact that a Treasury receives money from the District Board and respects orders issued to it for payment will not consitute the Treasury a Bank. Moreover, the District Board cannot be regarded as a customer.

It was suggested by the learned Advocate for the respondent that as the money deposited by the Board is utilized by the Treasury, it must be taken that a profit was made by the Treasury. But the language of Lord Brougham, and the judgment of the Exchequer Division, both require that there must be the business of utilising the money for purposes of profit. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Treasury is not a Bank and that, consequently, the use of the word "Cheque" in respect of orders issued by the District Board to the Treasury is a misnomer.

The next question is, whether the order in question cannot be construed as a bill of exchange. Apart from the concession made by the learned Vakil for the appellant, I am clear, from the reading of section 5 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, that all ingredients of a bill of exchange are to be found in the order issued by the District Board. It is an instrument in writing containing an unconditional order, signed by the maker, directing the Treasury to pay a certain sum of money to, or to the order of, the first defendant.

The next question is, if it is a bill of exchange, is it within the competence of the District Board to issue such a negotiable document? The chief difficulty arises from the language of section 26 of Negotiable Instruments Act. The proviso is in these terms: "Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to empower a Corporation to make, endorse or accept such instruments except in cases in which, under the law for the time being in force, they are so empowered." There can be no doubt that the District Board is a Corporation. Section 27 of the Act V of 1884 says that, "every Local Board shall be a body corporate by the name of the Local Board." Section 54 deals with the funds at the disposal of District and Local Boards; clause (2) of that section enables the lodgment of the fund in a Bank or Government Treasury. It is under this provision that monies are being deposited in the Treasury and orders are being issued for paying out. So far, there is nothing to indicate that the Board is authorised to issue negotiable instruments. Section 144 of the Act enables the Governor-in-Council by clause (xvi) to make rules consistent with the Act "for the guidance of Local Boards, their agents officers and the officers of Government in all matters connected with the carrying out of this Act." Under section 145, the rules are to be published. Section 147 is very important. It says that, "such rules and forms shall, until they are cancelled or altered, have the force of law." I must confess that the language that "the forms shall have the force of law" does not strike me as either very clear or artistic; but, however, there can be no doubt that the Legislature intended that the Governor-in-Council, to whom was delegated the prescribing of rules and forms, should have power to give to these forms the force of law. Now, turning to the Local Fund Code we find, at page 379, a form which corresponds to the one issued in the present case. That, undoubtedly, contains language which denotes that the order can be negotiated. As the act of the Governor-in-Council in prescribing the froms was certainly inter vires the question, therefore, is whether we can infer from it that the District Board was impliedly authorised to issue negotiable orders. Rule 549 of Local Fund Code says, that such forms shall be supplied to the Engineer or to other officers in books to be operated upon. Reading, therefore, sections 144 to 147 of Act V of 1884, with rule 549 of the Local Fund Code and the form at page 379 of the Code, I am of opinion that the Local Board is empowered to make, endorse or accept negotiable instruments. It follows from this that the endorsement in favour of the 4th defendant was properly made. The District Judge has found that his action was bona fide and that he was a holder in due course. I see no reason for not accepting this finding of fact. I am, therefore, of opinion that the conclusion of the learned District Judge is right and that this appeal should be dismissed.

Original Suit No. 483 of 1916 was rightly brought by the 4th defendant as plaintiff because the action of the appellant in instituting Original Suit No. 52 of 1916 necessitated his suing to have his rights secured as against him and in the alternative against the 1st and 2nd defendants. But we think that the 4th defendant was not justified, in preferring Appeal No. 97 of 1918 to the lower Appellate Court, in paying Court fees, as if the claim was one for the recovery of the money. In the first Court Court fee was paid on the declaration prayed for. In this Court, also, Court-fee was paid only on the declaration. Therefore, in directing the appellant in Second Appeal No. 833 of 1919 to pay the costs of the respondent (4th defendant) the excess Court-fee paid by him in the lower Appellate Court should not be charged against him. In other respects, both the second appeals are dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—In this case the Revenue Authorities assessed to revenue certain lands within the ambit of the estate of which the respondents are the proprietors. The respondents have succeeded below in a suit brought by them to contest the validity of the assessment and to recover possession of the lands, and an appeal has been preferred on behalf of the Secretary of State.

The lands in question were, at the time of the Thak and Revenue surveys of 1859 and 1860, the bed of a done or river known in one part as the Lakshipura and in other parts, apparently, by the names of the villages by or through which it flowed. The river was part of a net work of rivers and channels connected ultimately with the main stream of the Ganges. Whatever else may be said about this river, it is a fundamental fact in the case that it never was a public navigable river. The fact is asserted in the plaint and is not denied in the written statement. There is no express issue on the subject and the Subordinate Judge finds on the evidence that the dona was "small and shallow." The evidence is that it was in the habit of drying up during the hot season.

The river, owing to natural causes, silted up and the former bed became suitable for cultivation. According to the evidence, the change occurred some time in the eighties of the last century. By proceedings under Act IX of 1847 commenced in 1903, these lands on the site of the river were assessed to revenue, and the assessment was confirmed by an order of the Board of Revenue, dated the 25th February 1913. The Revenue Officers took possession of the lands on the 1st April 1913, but the circumstances under which they did so are not before us. The present suit was instituted on the 17th April 1914.

The learned Subordinate Judge found on the first issue framed by him that the suit was not barred by limitation; on the second issue that the lands were assessed to revenue at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and on the third issue that the Revenue Authorities had no jurisdiction to proceed under Act IX of of 1847. By his decree he declared that the assessment was invalid and restored the respondents to possession.

On the second issue, the important issue on the merits, whether the lands were assessed to revenue at the time of the Permanent Settlement, the respondents examined a number of witnesses of advanced age who all speak to the dona coming first into existence a few years before the thak and revenue surveys. The Subordinate Judge has accepted the evidence of these witnesses, and, if it is accepted, it is conceded that the appeal must fail. The evidence would go some length at least to show that the lands were dry at the Permanent Settlement and, if so, they must have been assessed to revenue and cannot now be re-assessed.

Two answers are made on behalf of the appellant, the Secretary of State. The first is that the respondents had no right to make the case that the lands were dry at the Permanent Settlement and no right to give evidence in support of that case. I shall deal with that when I come to the question of limitation.

The second answer is that the evidence is unreliable. It does seem that the locality must be a healthy one to produce so many old men with memories so clear, but their account of the matter is by no means impossible or improbable.

But, if this body of evidence be rejected, and if it be assumed that this river existed at the Permanent Settlement, the result is the same.

On that hypothesis it is argued for the appellant, that the burden lies on the respondents to show that the lands were included within the limits of the estate permanently settled with the respondents' predecessor. That may be so, but the burden is discharged or shifted as soon as it is shown or admitted that this river, which is within the ambit of the estate, was not a navigable river.

We were referred to Jagadinda Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (1) and to some of the cases in which it has been followed and applied. But in all those cases the subject of dispute was the bed or the former bed of a public navigable river. The question is always one of fact and the law has to be applied to the facts of each case as it arises [Cf. Haradas Acharjya Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State (2)]. A public navigable river is opposed to a private non-navigable river. The distinction represents in more precise language the distinction which the Regulations draw between the principal rivers or rivers spoken of in association with the sea on the one hand, and the small and shallow rivers on the other, the test being whether a river is navigable for boats at all seasons of the year Maharaja of Burdwan v. Secretary of State (Secretary of State v. Bijoy Chand Mahatap) (3). The question of size may not be without importance but, speaking generally, the presumption in the one case is that the bed belongs to the public or is public domain and in the other that the bed belongs to a private proprietor. In the absence of any other evidence to the contrary than that afforded by a thak or survey map, these natural presumptions may be sufficient to displace the contrary evidence of the map. In the present case the thak and survey maps support the prima facie presumption that this river with its bed was included in the estate permanently settled which now belongs to the respondents, and the burden of proving the contrary rests on the appellant. As apart from the map, there is no evidence one way or the other, the appellant fails.

This view is supported by the language of the fourth clause of section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825 which speaks of "small and shallow rivers, the beds of which with the jalkar right of fishery may have been heretofore recognised as the property of individuals." It is also supported by the cases cited in Maharaja of Burdwan v. Secretary of State (Secretary of State v. Bijoy Chand Mahatap (3) as to the proprietary right in the beds of non-navigable rivers which run between two estates Maharaja of Burdwan v. Secretary of State (Secretary of State v. Bijoy Chand Mahatap) (3).

But then, it is said, that even if, in the language of Regulation II of 1819, this river was included within the limits of the estate for which a Permanent Settlement was concluded, the Revenue Authorities are now entitled to assess revenue on the dry bed. The contrary, however, has been decided by the Privy Council with reference to the provisions of Regulation II of 1819, and those of Act IX of 1847. [Secretary of State v. Fahamidannissa Begum (4), Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (1) and see Maharaja of Burdwan v. Secretary of State (Secretary of State v. Bijoy Chand Mahatap) (3).

From the argument addressed to us, it seems to be thought that there is something in the fourth clause of section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825, read with the second proviso to the first clause, which justified the assessment made in the present case.

The first clause of the section applies to land "gained" by accession from a river or the sea, the word "gained" being that used in the second clause of section 3 of Regulation II of 1819 and intepreted in the decisions of the Privy Council. Such land is to be considered an increment to the estate to which it is annexed subject to two provisos, firstly, that the proprietor is not to have a larger interest in such land than he has in the parent estate, and secondly, that the land is not to be exempted from "any assessment for the public revenue to which it may be liable under the provisions of Regulation II of 1819, or of any other Regulation in force."

The fourth clause enacts that sand banks or churs thrown up in small and shallow rives "shall as hitherto belong to the proprietor of the bed of the river, subject to the provisions stated in the first clause of the present section."

There is no dispute that the first proviso is operative both in cases which arise under the first clause and in cases which arise under the fourth clause. As to the second proviso it neither adds to nor subtracts from the rights and liabilities of the proprietor under preceding Regulations, including II of 1819. It introduces, therefore, no new element which takes the case out of the Privy Council decisions.

In Fahamidannissa's case (4), the question arose as to lands dry in 1793 which afterwards became covered with water and then again reformed. If, as would appear from the facts stated in the report, the lands had been diluviated by the action of navigable rivers, the case was, if anything, a stronger one than the present, because the lands had, temporarily at least, during the period of submergence, become a part of the public domain. The lands in the present case, whether or not they were covered with flowing water at the Permanent Settlement, were never a part of the public domain.

It is abundantly clear, therefore, that neither Regulation II of 1819, nor Act IX of 1847, empowers the Revenue Authorities to assess the lands now in question. If they were river bed at the Permanent Settlement, they were nonetheless, in the circumstances, lands presumably within the estate settled. That being so, they are in no respect different from other waste lands included in the estate. As the Privy Council said in Lopez v. Muidon Mohan Thakore (5). "The site is the property." Whatever changes may have occurred, from natural or artificial causes, however the land may have improved in value, Government are not entitled to additional revenue for such lands [Kandukuri Balasurya v. Secretary of State (6)].

(4) 17 I. A. 40; 17 C. 590 at pp. 597, 599; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 391; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 933.

There remains the question of limitation. In the Court below, Article 14 of the present Limitation Act seems to have been applied. It was held that, with the deduction allowed by section 15 (2) of the Act, the suit was in time. It was argued before us that the procedure applicable to the case was that provided by sections 22, 23 and 24 of Regulation II of 1819, as modified by section 10 of Regulation III of 1828 and that the suit was barred by limitation under section 24 of the former Regulation. If that be so, section 15 of the Limitation Act is inapplicable [Kalimuddi Mollah v. Sahibuddin Mollah (7)].

It was further argued on the same basis that the respondents were not at liberty to tender evidence that these lands were dry lands at the Permanent Settlement (Regulation III of 1828, section 10, third clause).

The effect of Act IX of 1847 on the procedure provided by the Regulation cited was considered by the Privy Council in Fahamidunnissa's case (4). Their Lordships held (page 47) that Act IX of 1847 only dealt with machinery and (page 51) that it only applied to lands "already liable to be assessed under existing legislation." They further held, on the terms of the first section, that it was only in relation to such lands "that the previous Regulations are to cease to have effect."

In my opinion, therefore, there is considerable force in the argument that, in cases where the Revenue Authorities properly take action under Act IX of 1847, the procedure provided by the Regulations is swept away by section 1 of the Act, but where the action taken is unauthorised and invalid, the statutory remedy is still the remedy which the Regulations provide.

It is unnecessary, however, in the present case to express a final opinion on this topic.

As regards the pleadings, even if the question whether the lands were dry at the Permanent Settlement is anything more than a question of the evidence admissible under the general issue whether the lands are liable to assessment, the result, in the view I take, is the same whether the lands were dry at the Permanent Settlement or were covered with water.

As to limitation, under section 24 of Regulation II "persons whose lands may be assessed" are entitled to sue "any time within one year from the date of their being informed of the Board's decision."

The Court below was not asked to apply this provision and, as Greaves, J., pointed out during the argument, there is no evidence on the record showing the precise date on which the respondents were informed of the Board's decision. It is stated in the plaint that the local officers took possession of the estate on the 1st April 1913, but there is no admission by the respondents that the Board's decision was communicated to them before that date. I am unable to say, therefore, that, supposing section 24, applies the suit is out of time.

In my opinion the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

GREAVES, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI —The suit which has given rise to this appeal was brought by the plaintiff on the 29th August 1912 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda, as the head of a Hindu religious foundation, to set aside an alienation by his predecessor, and to recover possession of the property. The plaintiff was, at the time of the suit, a minor and sued under the guardianship of one Keshav Prasad. The allegation on which the claim is based is that the village of Benipur to which the suit relates is a part of the endowment, and that the former head of the institution was not entitled to convey the property to his wife, Jairaj, and that, in so doing, he exceeded his powers under the Hindu Law. The defendants in the suit are the lady to whom the property was conveyed, and her step-daughter to whom she subsequently made a gift of the same. The defence is that the village in question did not form part of the foundation and was the personal property of the donor.

The foundation to which the property is alleged to appertain, was created in the early part of the nineteenth century by a Hindu reformer, a native of Upper India, who established, in the Bombay Presidency, a new Vaishnavite sect. His name was Sahajanand Swami, and he appears to have been held in great respect by his followers who on his death deified him and erected a shrine in his honour in his native village of Chapia, in the District of Gonda in Upper India. Long before his death, the foundation appears to have acquired great importance ; he divided his religious jurisdiction into two sections, over one of which he installed his nephew, Ajodhya Prasad, who died somewhere in the sixties. Ajodhya Prasad, upon his installation, became the religious head of the Ahmedabad foundation, to which appertain 11 temples including the one at Chapia.

In 1857 Ajodhya Prasad is said to have purchased the village in question. The plaintiff alleges that the purchase was made with the funds of the foundation and that the income accruing from the village has been applied in the discharge of the revenue thereon and in defraying the religious expenses appertaining to the institution, as prescribed by the founder. On Ajodhya Prasad's death, Keshav Prasad, his son, succeeded to the headship of the foundation. Keshav Prasad died in 1883, leaving a Will, dated 30th August in that year, by which he nominated his son, Purshotam Parshad as his successor to the Gaddi, and Purshotam Prasad, on Keshav Prasad's death, came into the charge of the foundation.

On the 29th March 1901 Purshotam Prasad made the gift already mentioned to his second wife, Jairaj. A few months later she purported to make a re-conveyance of the property to the temple, but the defendants contend that the document was executed without due comprehension. That point becomes, however, immaterial in view of the other facts of the case. Jairaj, on the 30th October 1911, executed a deed of gift in favour of the defendant No. 2, Kamla Lachhmi, a daughter of Purshotam. It is this transaction which has given rise to the present action.

It should be noted here that neither in this particular institution, nor among the sect Sahajanand established, is celibacy the rule applicable to the religious head or to the disciples ; excepting the founder, his successors were all what is called ghirist that is, family men. So, apparently, are the bulk of the followers. This circumstance undoubtedly differentiates the present foundation from other endowments in Southern India which appertain to celibate Mahants or constitute celibate institutions. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on two grounds, first, that the village was not proved to be endowed property, and, secondly, that the suit was barred under the Statute of Limitation. On appeal by the plaintiff to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, the Trial Judge's decision has been set aside and the claim for possession of the village decreed.

The defendant No. 2, Musammat Kamla Lachhmi, has appealed to His Majesty in Council and the main contention on her behalf is that the Judges in the Court below are wrong in holding that the village of Benipur is a part of the endowed property belonging to the foundation. Reliance has been placed, chiefly, on the Wills of Keshav Prasad and Purshotam, in which they both described themselves as the owners and proprietors of the properties of the endowment.

Their Lordships do not, however, consider that the mere fact of their calling themselves the owners of the foundation is evidence that any particular property was the personal property or acquisition of the Acharjya. Both Keshav Prasad and Purshotam purport to treat the temples and the properties on one and the same footing. So far as the temples are concerned, the position of private ownership is, prima facie, improbable. In their Lordships' opinion such inference from statements in the Will, in respect of the properties, would be equally erroneous.

By his Will, dated the 1st April 1901, Purshotam nominated the plaintiff as his successor. Purshotam died, according to the plaintiff, in December 1901, according to the defendant's case his death took place a month earlier, the difference in date is immaterial for the purposes of this judgment. Immediately after his death, a suit was brought by a large body of people belonging to the sect under section 539 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) against, amongst others, the plaintiff, the principal devisee under the Will, for a declaration that neither the temples nor the properties attached to the temples were the personal property of the Acharjya, nor had he had any power of disposition over them dehors the conditions imposed by the Hindu Law. The village of Benipur formed part of the properties to which that suit related.

The Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad, who tried the case in the first instance, decided that the temple and the villages appertaining thereto were endowed property in which the followers of Sahajanand were interested, and that Purshotam had no right to alienate any portion thereof. He, however, upheld the nomination of the plaintiff, and retained the foundation in his charge as its religious head.

On appeal, the High Court held that the decree of the Subordinate Judge had proceeded further than what the evidence in the case warranted, and they accordingly varied the lower Court's decree. The declaration they made is in the following terms:—

"Having regard to the fact that the Acharjya is a layman and not an ascetic, we see no reason to disbelieve the evidence of the witnesses above referred to that the Namvero and Bhets are intended for the personal maintenance and benefit of the Acharjya, and not for the support of the institution: and, as it is clear that the accounts of the Namvero and Bhets are kept in one or other of the Kothars, we cannot hold that the whole of the property in suit is, without exception, public religious property. We, therefore, amend the finding of the lower Court upon the second issue by declaring that the property in suit is public religious property except in so far as it consists of accumulations of Namvero and Bhets or investments thereof. In other respects, we confirm the decree of the lower Court."

The position, therefore, is that any person contending that a particular property is not a part of the endowment might show that it was acquired by the Acharjya with funds which belonged exclusively to him or which might be regarded as his official perquisites. Benipur was undoubtedly included in the claim under the former suit, but the defendant was no party to the action. She is entitled, therefore, in the present suit to prove that the village in question was so acquired. No attempt has been made to point to any specific evidence in this direction. On the other hand, the settlement decree in 1869, relating to the village of Benipur, shows that the Acharjya called therein "Mahant" was holding the property as a part of the endowment. The decree is in the following terms :—

"Proprietary rights of Mauza Benipur with exception of the 'patti' belonging to Raja Kishen Dutt Pandey Taluqdar, decreed to Mahant Kesho Pershad and his successor on the 'gaddi'."

The plaintiff has also produced account-books of Chapia, which the Judicial Commissioners point out show that the income arising from the village was devoted to the purposes of the endowment. It is urged that there were two sets of accounts kept in connection with this foundation, one at the Upper Treasury, which was in the direct charge of the Acharjya and contained a record of offerings, &c., made personally to him; the other at the Lower Treasury, which referred simpliciter to the endowed properties; and it is contended that had the account-books of the Upper Treasury been produced by the plaintiff they would have shown that Benipur had been purchased with funds exclusively belonging to the Acharjya. The contention proceeds evidently upon a misapprehension, for their Lordships find that books alleged to belong to the Upper Treasury were in fact produced by the witness, Keshav Prasad, who was called by the defendant; he is the guardian of the plaintiff and he states that he has produced all the books from Sambat 1914 to Sambat 1935. So far as their Lordships can see, these are the very books on the non-production of which the appellant bases her complaint. No effort seems to have been made to examine them and they were afterwards returned to the plaintiff.

There is one significant fact in connection with this village. In all the accounts, Benipur is mentioned with the prefix, "Shri", an expression which denotes its sacred or endowed character. This circumstance has not been referred to in the judgments of the lower Courts, but it is one which appears on the record and cannot be overlooked.

On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment and decree of the lower Court are right and ought to be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—These two appeals arise out of proceedings taken by the Revenue Authorities under Act IX of 1847 for the assessment to revenue of lands which, at the time of the Thak and Revenue surveys, of 1859 and 1860, formed portion of the beds of certain rivers.

By decisions, dated the 14th November 1914, the 2nd January 1915, and the 11th March 1915, the Board of Revenue found that the lands were liable to assessment under the Act and disallowed the objections of the proprietors. The proprietors, who are the executors of the estate of the late Babu Kally Kishen Tagore, then brought two suits to contest these decisions, Suit No. 537 of 1915 and Suit No. 195 of 1916. Both suits were dismissed by the Subordinate Judge and the proprietors have appealed to this Court. Appeal No. 143 relates to Suit No. 195 and Appeal No. 144 to Suit No. 537. In both appeals the Secretary of State is the respondent and it will be convenient to deal with them by one and the same judgment.

The lands have been assessed to revenue on the footing that they are accretions by fluvial action to villages included within estates belonging to the appellants which were permanently settled in 1793. The villages concerned are :—

1. Syed Jafar } abutting on the River
2. Arazbegee } Arazbegee.
3. Aoliapur }
4. Kalaiya abutting on the River Kalaiya
5. Char Bukhainagar } Abutting on the
6. Char Khanan } River Bukhainagar.

As regards the accretions to villages 1, 2 and 3 in the list, the first plea taken on the Secretary of State's behalf was that the appellant's suit No. 537 of 1915, so far as it related to these accretions, was barred by limitation under section 24 of Regulation II of 1819. Aoliapur is not expressly mentioned in the copy of the Board's decision of 14th November 1914, which has been printed, but both in the Court below and before us that decision was treated as covering all the accreted lands abutting on the River Arazbegee (see also the plaint in suit No. 537).

Section 24 of Regulation II lays down that "persons whose lands may be assessed... shall...be entitled to sue any time within one year from the date of their being informed of the Board's decision ; but after the above period shall have elapsed the decision of the Board shall be final and conclusive."

A proviso is added, but it is not suggested, that the present case comes within it.

The decision of the 14th November 1914 was communicated to the appellants on the 6th December 1914. Suit No. 537 was instituted more than a year after on the 13th December 1915. If, therefore, the section applies, the Subordinate Judge is right in upholding the plea of limitation in regard to the accretions to these three villages. Section 15 (2) of the Limitation Act of 1908 has no application to a period of limitation provided by a special or local law [Kalimuddin Mollah v. Sahibuddin Mollah (1)].

The question arises whether the rules contained in section 10 of Regulation III of 1828 and section 24 of Regulation II of 1819 govern a suit to contest an order of the Board of Revenue under section 6 of Act IX of 1847 confirming an assessment under the Act and to obtain incidental relief such as recovery of possession of lands of which possession has been taken under section 10 of the 1828 Regulation. The question was touched upon but not decided in R. A. No. 302 of 1918 (decided on the 12th April 1920).*

The effect of Act IX of 1847 on the Regulations was considered by a Full Bench of this Court and then by the Privy Council in Fahamidannissa Begum v. Secretary of State (2). The discussion turned on the true meaning of sections 1 and 6 of Act IX, particularly the concluding words of section 6 which enact that the orders of the Board of Revenue shall be "final". It is only necessary to premise that it had previously been decided by another Full Bench that Act IX was only a procedure Act, which left the substantive rights of the Government and the proprietors of land to be governed by the Regulations. Budroonissa v. Prosunno Coomar Bose (3).

The judgment of the majority of the Full Bench in Fahamidannissa's case (2) was delivered by Wilson, J. As I understand, the majority of the learned Judges held that section 1 of Act IX abrogated all rules of procedure or all mere rules of procedure contained in Regulations II of 1819, IX of 1825 and III of 1828 "for investigations regarding the liability to assessment of lands gained from the sea or rivers by alluvion, or dereliction, or regarding the right of Government to the ownership thereof." The investigations referred to were investigations by the Revenue Authorities directed to the purpose indicated. The Act did not touch the Regulations mentioned, or such a Regulation as VII of 1822, so far as they prescribed rules for assessment when once the liability to assessment or the right of Government to the ownership had been determined in the affirmative.

The majority further held that, in place of the procedure provided by the Regulations for determining such liability and such right, Act IX substituted a new and simpler procedure founded on a comparison of survey maps from time to time.

According to the majority, again, under the new procedure, the Revenue Authorities no longer exercised the judicial functions or powers vested in them by the Regulations.

Lastly, as to the finality attributed to the Board's order by section 6 of Act IX, the majority held, in effect, that the Board's orders were final for the purpose of the jurisdiction conferred which extended only to the assessment of lands liable to assessment, and that the Board's order in any case might be contested in the Civil Courts on the ground that the land was not liable to be assessed.

Mitter, J, dissented from the opinion of the majority. That learned Judge held that the only 'tribunals' abolished by section 1 of Act IX were the special tribunals created by Regulation III of 1828, that the judicial functions of the Revenue Authorities were left intact, that the jurisdiction conferred by Act IX embraced not only the question of the rate of assessment but also the question of the liability to assessment, and that, under section 6 of Act IX, the orders of the Board of Revenue on both these questions were final and conclusive and not open to attack in the Civil Courts. An order of the Board might be attacked as ultra vires but only if it was outside the jurisdiction of the Board so understood.

As to the facts; lands included within the limits of an estate permanently settled in 1793 had been washed away by fluvial action and had afterwards reformed in situ. During the period of submersion, the revenue of the whole estate had been paid without abatement. An order of the Board had confirmed an additional assessment imposed on the lands by the local officers. The suit was brought to contest the order. All the learned Judges, including Mitter, J., were of opinion that the lands were not liable to assessment under the Regulations, and that Act IX had made no change in that respect. The result depended entirely on the effect of the Board's order.

According to the opinion of the majority of the Full Bench the suit succeeded and an appeal to England was taken by the Secretary of State. The Privy Council had no difficulty in accepting the view that Act IX dealt only with machinery [Jahamidannissa Begum v. Secretary of State (2).] Their Lordships went on to review the Regulations and Act IX and on the question of the liability of the lands to assessment arrived at the same conclusion as the High Court had done (pages 47-52*). Their Lordships then turned to section 6 of Act IX and expressed themselves in no uncertain terms in general agreement with the opinion of the majority of the Judges. They said :—

"The provisions of section 31 of the Regulation of 1819 are in no way repealed or affected by the Act of 1847. The action of the Revenue Authorities was, therefore, in their Lordships' opinion, wholly illegal and invalid."

They further said that the Act did not deprive "the owner of a permanently settled estate of that right of appeal which is given to him in order that he may have determined in a Civil Court the 'justness of the demand' of the Revenue Authorities."

As to the practice which has grown up under Act IX when a survey is made under the Act, the map is compared with the map of the preceding survey and, in accordance with Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (4), the comparison is taken as the starting point for deciding whether any lands are subject to additional assessment. If action is contemplated in any particular case, the local Revenue Officers are not precluded from making and do make further careful inquiries before the land is actually assessed. Up to the assessment the proceedings appear to be of an executive or administrative rather than of a judicial character. When the assessment is made, the proceedings are reported to the Board under section 6 of the Act. If the party interested lodges an objection to the assessment, the Board gives him an opportunity of being heard, if he so please, by Counsel or Pleader. At that stage, therefore, the proceedings, become judicial or quasi-judicial in their character. The order of the Board, though issued in the form of a Resolution—the form employed by the Executive Authorities in important matters—is in substance the judicial order of the highest Revenue Court in the Province. There is no question, now, that the party interested, if dissatisfied with the Board's order, may contest it by suit in the Civil Courts. The question is, as I have said, whether section 10 of Regulation III of 1828 and section 24 of Regulation II of 1819 apply to such a suit. In my opinion that question should be answered in the affirmative.

Dealing with section 6 of Act IX, the Privy Council in Fahamidannissa's case (2) speak of a suit to contest the Board's order as an appeal to the Civil Courts, thus adopting the language of section 10 of the Regulation of 1828 which their Lordships had quoted in the earlier part of their judgment. If that section be applicable, it would follow from its terms that section 24 of the Regulation of 1819 is also applicable.

It is suggested that the suits contemplated by section 31 of Regulation II of 1819 should be distinguished from suits under section 24. I can find no ground for such distinction and the language of the Privy Council is opposed to it. A suit under section 24 followed the decision of the Board under section 21 declaring the liability of the land to assessment and if it was not brought within the time limited the decision of the Board was to be "final and conclusive." The words of section 31 referring to the jurisdiction of "the Courts of Judicature to decide on all contested cases" are words of recital only. They do not give a right of suit in addition to the right of suit given by section 24. Section 10 of Regulation III of 1828 is applicable at the same stage of the proceedings as section 24 of the Regulation of 1819. It lays down that, as soon as the Board has declared the land liable to assessment, the decision is to be carried into immediate execution, that is, subject of course to the result of any suit instituted under section 24. It also prescribes rules for such suits with the object of curtailing, rather than of lengthening, the proceedings. The result was that, unless a suit of the nature indicated by clause third of section 10 of the later Regulation was brought within the time limited by section 24 of the earlier Regulation, the decision of the Board declaring the land liable to assessment became final and conclusive for all purposes.

The place of such a decision is now taken by an order of the Board under section 6 of Act IX. The only difference is that, under Act IX, the land is assessed before the case comes to the Board under that section. But the actual assessment is not a matter with which the Civil Courts have ever had any concern. Their concern is with the question of the liability to assessment. An order under section 6 corresponds with a decision of the Board under Regulation II declaring liability to assessment. At that stage, Act IX is silent and the Regulations again speak. The statutory remedy is to be found in the Regulations and a proprietor who desires to have recourse to the Courts is bound by the prescribed conditions.

It follows that such suits as the present are governed as to limitation by section 24 of Regulation II of 1819 and that, under section 10 of Regulation III of 1828, they should be "heard and determined" by the trial Courts "in the same manner as regular appeals." The fourth clause of the latter section saves the appeals to the High Court admissible under section 26 of Regulation II of 1819 as modified by section 6 of Regulation XIV of 1825.

A comparatively short period of limitation in these cases is no particular hardship. Presumably, all materials bearing on the subject have been collected during the course of the revenue proceedings and have been brought to the attention of the Board. Under the Limitation Act, the period of limitation would probably be one year under Article 14.

The result is that as, regards the lands in the three villages on the River Atrai agree, I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation.

As to the lands on the other two rivers, the suits are in time and the position is this. It has been assumed on both sides that there was no material change in the channels of these rivers between 1793 and 1859. Portions of the beds adjoining the villages named have now silted up. The Board has found that the rivers were and are still navigable. On the materials before as, such as Major Rennell's map of 1765 or thereabouts, the Thak and Revenue survey maps of 1859-1860 and the maps of the recent diara survey on which the proceedings under Act IX were founded. I can see no reason to doubt the correctness, of the Board's findings. Prima facie, therefore, the presumption is that in 1793 the beds of the river were public domain and were not included within the estates then permanently settled. To rebut the presumption, the plaintiffs rely on the Thak and Survey maps of 1859-1861 according to which the whole width of the rivers was included in the plaintiff's estate. But the plaintiffs offer no other evidence, and the Thak and Survey maps are not in themselves sufficient to justify us in saying that the Board's orders are wrong and ought to be reversed. [Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (4)]. The area of the villages, as entered in the Thak and Survey maps, is of little assistance without some indication of their area in 1793.

I may add that the question whether a river or water course is navigable or not does not depend on its name. It is immaterial whether a particular map describes it as a 'river' or a 'nadi' or a 'khal' or a 'dane.' The word "khal" or the word "done" may denominate a water way of great importance to river boats and river steamers.

It was said that in previous cases relating to similar lands, the Government had not pressed their claims and had either dropped the proceedings or not appealed from an adverse decision in the trial Court. That may be so. The Government may not have been at the time as confident of their rights as they are now, or they may have had some other reason for acting as they did. Nothing occurred which affects the claim of the Government to additional revenue for the lands now in question.

In my opinion these appeals should be dismissed with costs.

MISCELLANEOUS APPLICATION No. 31 OF 1920.

Present:—Mr. Staurt, A. J. C., and Pandit Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.

H. H. MAHARAJ RANA SIR UDAIBHAN SINGH, K.C.S.I., OF DHOLPUR—APPLICANT

ESTATE OF PRINCE BASDEO SINGH, DECEASED, OF RAE BARELI—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 31—Registration, place of—Will, registration of, at place other than office of Registrar or residence of testator, validity of.

Section 31 of the Registration Act permits registration to be made in ordinary cases either in the office of the Registrar or Sub-Registrar or at the place of residence of the person executing the document, but in extraordinary cases it does not exclude registration at places other than these. [p. 908, col. 2]

A person may be in an ambulance car or in a Court-house or in a train or at a railway station or on a journey, when the necessity of writing a Will and getting it registered may suddenly arise in his mind owing to some accident or otherwise, and it cannot be said that if, in such cases, the Registrar or Sub-Registrar goes to the place where the person who wants to get his Will registered is, the registration would be invalid because the place where it took place was neither the office of the Registrar or Sub-Registrar nor the residence of the testator. [p. 908, col. 2.]

Mr. Niamat ul-lah, for the Applicant for Probate.

Messrs. Peary Lal Banerji and U. S. Bajpai, for Rani Bhagwant Kuar.

Mr. Basdeo Lal, for Sardar Gulzar Singh.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for Probate or, in the alternative, for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed in respect of the estate of Prince Basdeo Singh, a resident of Rae Bareli, who died at Dholpur on the 18th September 1918. The Will in question purported to have been executed on the 15th February 1915. Prince Basdeo Singh was the maternal uncle of the applicant, who is the Ruling Chief of Dholpur. He was the Taluqdar of Pindri Ganeshpur and his name was entered at No. 217 in List I and No. 49 in List V appended to Act I of 1869. He had four wives but had no issue by any of them. From seven or eight years prior to his death he lived for the most part in Dholpur and visited Rae Bareli only occasionally. His wives lived at Rae Bareli.

On the 24th September 1914 Prince Basdeo Singh executed a Will whereby he devised his entire property to the present Maharaj Rana of Dholpur with a direction to make over the said property to his younger son, if he had two sons, and to pay certain allowances to his wives and mother. The Prince was suffering at that time from an abscess. The Will was not registered. He subsequently recovered from his ailment. On the 15th February 1915 he got the present Will drafted and faired out at Dholpur by a person named Abdul Razzaq and came in a motor car to Agra accompanied by Qazi Aziz-ud-din Ahmed, the Judicial Secretary of the Dholpur State. An arrangement had previously been made with the District Registrar of Agra to meet him at some place near the Dholpur House.

Mr. D. R. Lyle, who was then District Judge and District Registrar of Agra, states that he was asked to go to a small house near the Collector's Court, and went there and waited outside until the parties came in a motor car and that the Will in question (Exhibit 1) was registered by him. He further states that the gentleman who presented the Will for registration was a very stout person described as Shahzada Basdeo Singh and that the gentleman remained throughout in the motor car and all proceedings took place while he was in the car. He does not remember whether the Will was signed by that gentleman in his presence or not; but he states that Qazi Aziz ud-din Ahmed identified him, that he admitted the execution of the Will and that the Will bore a marginal addition at the time it was presented for registration, the existence of which was noted by him in the registration endorsement. Qazi Az'z ud-din Ahmed deposes that the previous Will of the 24th September 1914 had been written by him according to the dictation of Prince Basdeo Singh and attested by him and Major Willmore, that the Prince was then suffering from an abscess, and that as that Will was not a good Will because it had not been registered he had told him that he would like to go to Agra and have a fresh Will executed. He describes how the Will now in question was faired out at Dholpur and brought into Agra, where it was signed by Prince Basdeo Singh and registered at a house near the Dholpur Kothi on the 15th February 1915. The evidence of Qazi Aziz-ud-din Ahmed and Mashuq Ali, who was then the Chief Registration Clerk at Agra, shows that the Will was signed by Prince Basdeo Singh in their presence and that both of them attested the Will. They further state that the Prince was then quite healthy and in full possession of his mental faculties. The idea of executing the Will and getting it registered had clearly originated with him because the previous one had remained unregistered. There is no proof that any undue influence was exercised on the Prince at the time of the execution of the Will or at any time previous to it. In fact the genuineness of the Will is not seriously disputed by any of his wives. We find, therefore, that the due execution and attestation of the Will are satisfactorily proved and that no undue influence is established.

The next question is whether the Will was duly registered. The learned Counsel who appears for one of the wives of Prince Basdeo Singh, contends that, under section 13A of Act I of 1869, read with section 28 of the Registration Act (XVI of 1908), the Will could not be validly registered at Agra and that in any case the registration could not have been effected under section 31 of the latter Act otherwise than at the office of the District Registrar or at the place of residence of the testator. Section 13A of Act 1 of 1869 provides that the Will of a Taluqdar should be registered according to the law for the time being in force relating to the Registration of Assurances,

The word 'assurances" is loosely used to cover documents by which any interest is created, present or future, vested or contingent. It is not necessarily restricted to documents by which a present interest in immoveable property is created or assured. According to Wharton, the term is usually confined to transfers of land and is defined in the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888, which regulates assurances of land to charitable uses; but in its generic sense it implies the legal evidences of the transfer of property whereby every man's estate is assured to him, and all controversies, doubts, and difficulties are either prevented or removed (Wharton's Law Lexicon, 12th Edition, page 79). In the Indian Registration Acts the word has been used to indicate all documents by which an interest of any kind is created or assured in land or other property. Act XXI of 1864, for instance, was described as an Act for the Registration of Assurances, and dealt with documents relating to land and other proprty. Act XX of 1866 was similarly described as an Act for the Registration of Assurances. When section 2 of Act I of 1869, by which the word "registered" was defined, was enacted, there were certain rules prescribing registration of assurances in Oudh. By section 1 of Act X of 1885 the definition of the word "registered" was extended so as to cover a case of deposit of a Will with a Registrar according to the law for the time being in force relating to the deposit of Wills; but the language used in connection with the registration of documents, other than by deposit, remained unaltered. Act III of 1877 was then in force which, like the present Act (XVI of 1908), provided for the registration of "document," the use of the word "assurances" having been eliminated. From the manner in which the word was used in the older Acts there can be no doubt that it was intended to cover documents dealing with land or other property, whether compulsorily registrable or not. Sections 28 and 29 of the Registration Act (XVI of 1908) deal with the registration of certain documents. Section 40 deals with the registration of Wills, which can be presented for registration to any Registrar or Sub-Registrar. Section 42 deals with the deposit of Wills which every Registrar is required to accept. The method of registration prescribed for Wills by the Taluqdars is that prescribed by the Registration Act and not by any of its specific provisions. Section 31 permits registration to be made in the ordinary cases either in the office of the Registrar or Sub-Registrar or at the place of the residence of the person executing the document; but in extraordinary cases, such as can easily be imagined, it does not exclude registration at places other than these. A person may be in an ambulance car or in a Court-house or in a train or at the railway station or on a journey when the necessity of writing a Will and getting it registered may suddenly arise in his mind owing to some accident or otherwise and it cannot be said that if in such cases the Registrar or Sub Registrar goes to the place where the person who wants to get his Will registered is, the registration would be invalid, because the place where it took place was neither the office of the Registrar or Sub Registrar nor the residence of the testator. The reference to "ordinary cases" under section 31 implies that the restriction contained therein is not applicable to extraordinary cases. We do not, therefore, consider that the registration was in any way irregular or invalid.

Certain questions have been raised in regard to the right of Prince Basdeo Singh to make a bequest or as to the nature of the disposition which the Will embodies. The will, as at first written out, granted to the mother and wives of the testator certain allowances and declared that Maharaj Rana Udaibhan Singh shall be the heir and lawful owner of the entire property, moveable and immoveable, belonging to the testator after his death. It provided for the grant of certain scholarships and for the performance of the shradh ceremonies, and appointed the Maharana an executor to execute the Will. At the time of registration the testater got Qazi Az'z ud din Ahmed to add by way of a postcript "This Will shall affect only when no male issue of mine is alive, and my widows shall not have power of adoption nor shall they be entitled to transfer or destroy any property which has been given to them (jo meri di hui hai), the whole of the property devolving upon the Maharana after them." The suggestion made on behalf of the widows is that the intention of the testator was to give a life interest to the widows in the entire property, belonging to him, without any power of transfer with the reversion to the Maharana, and an attempt has been made by the production of evidence as to the conversations, which the wives and certain other persons are stated to have had with the Prince after he had executed this Will to support that construction. Sections 67 and 68 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), which are applicable to the Wills of Talukdars, do not, however, permit extrinsic evidence of intention to be admitted except where there is a latent ambiguity. Such declarations of intention, if made, cannot, moreover, be permitted to vary a Will registered in the manner laid down in section 13A of Act I of 1869, much less to supply materials for the construction of a document, if such construction would be at variance with the general purport and language of the Will. On behalf of the applicant it is suggested that the postscript refers to certain other property which had been previously given by the testator to his wives. For the right interpretation of the postscript it might, perhaps, be necessary to ascertain whether any such property had been given by the testator before the Will. Independently of the postscript, the Will does not refer to the grant of any such property to them. It directs the petitioner to execute the Will, and we take that direction as amounting to his appointment as executor. The determination of the precise construction to be placed on the Will in regard to other matters is unnecessary. If the executor finds any doubt at any time as to the nature of the dispositions made by the Will or as to the method in which they are to be carried out, he can get the same settled in consultation with the other beneficiaries or determined in a separate proceeding to which such beneficiaries are parties.

We allow the application accordingly and direct that the Probate of the Will be granted to the applicant. No order is made as to the costs of this proceeding.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 588 OF 1919.

August 19, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

RAM CHANDRA RAO—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

AND

Babu NANHU LAL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XVIII, r. 18, O. XLI, r. 23, O. XLIII, r. 1 (4)—Remand, order of, in exercise of inherent power—Appeal, whether lies—Local inspection—Court, power of, to use result of local inspection—Failure to make note of inspection, effect of.

Where the decree of a Trial Court is reversed on appeal and the Appellate Court, in the exercise of its inherent power remands the case to the Trial Court for a fresh decision, no appeal lies against the order of remand as such, inasmuch as the order does not fall within the purview of Order XLIII, rule 1 (4) of the Civil Procedure Code, but an appeal lies from the decree of the Appellate Court reversing the decree of the Trial Court. [p. 910, col 1.]

Under Order XVIII, rule 18 of the Civil Procedure Code a Judge has power to visit a locality and to use the result of his local inspection for certain purposes, e. g., for the purpose of enabling him to understand the questions that are being raised, to follow the evidence to apply it, and to test it, and, although it is desirable that he should place the result of his local inspection on the record, yet the omission to do so is a purely formal defect and would not necessarily vitiate his judgment. [p. 910, col. 2; p. 911, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated the 4th March 1919, reversing a decision of the Munsif, Gaya, dated the 8th June 1918.

Mr. S. A. Sami, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sew Nandan Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's title to a wall on the north of his house in Mohalla Deochaura, and to a Ghat to the east of his house, and for recovery of possession and for damages for the materials of a portion of the wall alleged to have been removed by the defendant No. 1.

The defendants' house is to the south of the plaintiff's. The plaintiff purchased the house from defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The defendant No. 1 resisted the claim of the plaintiff on various grounds.

RAM CHANDRA RAO v. NARAYAN LAL.

On the defendants' pleas, seven issues were raised in the Court of the Munsif. Most of them were issues of fact. The Munsif decided all the issues against the plaintiffs.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge set aside the Munsif's decision on the ground that his decision was based upon his personal observation of the disputed property and that no note of the local inspection was placed on the record, and, without deciding any of the issues, remanded the case for re-trial.

The defendant has appealed to this Court. The principal ground is that the order of remand was bad and illegal. The remand in this case was not under Order XLI, rule 23, inasmuch as the Munsif had not disposed of the suit on any preliminary ground. Therefore, Order XLIII, clause (u), which allows an appeal from an order of remand, has no application. In a similar case it was held in the case of Brij Mohan Pathak v. Deobhajan Pathak (1) (Hon'ble Chief Justice and Coutts, J.), that no appeal lay to this Court from the order of remand. This was pointed out to the learned Vakil for the appellant when the appeal was filed and, at his request, it was admitted per order of the learned Chief Justice and Adami, J., dated the 13th June 1919, as an appeal from the decree of the lower Appellate Court reversing the decree of the Munsif, on the appellant paying proper Court-fee. The proper Court-fee has now been paid and the appeal has been heard by me.

I do not think that the appeal is incompetent. It is an appeal not from the order of remand, but from the final decree of the lower Appellate Court : vide Bhadai Sahu v. Sheikh Manowar Ali (2). The preliminary objection of the respondent as to the competency of the appeal is, therefore, overruled.

Now, coming to the merits, the point for consideration is whether the Subordinate Judge was wrong in declining to decide the case on merits and in remanding it to the first Court for re-trial. The Subordinate Judge remanded the case on the ground that the Munsif had committed grave error in importing his own knowledge derived from the local inspection in the decision of the issues involved in the case and in not putting the result of his inspection on the record. Besides the local inspection held by the Munsif, there was other evidence before him, consisting of the Commissioner's report, as well as oral and documentary evidence offered by the parties.

In the case of London General Omnibus Co. Ltd. v. Lavell (3) it was held that the Judge ought not to substitute his view for the evidence in the case tried by him and that the result of the observations must be used by him only for the purpose of understanding the evidence. The principle of this case has been invariably followed both in the Judicial Committee and the Courts in India : vide Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (4), Joy Coomar v. Bundhoo Lall (5), Dwarka Nath Sardar v. Prosunno Kumar Hajra (6), Moran v. Bhagbat Lal Saha (7) and Rai Kishori Ghose v. Kumudini Kanta Ghose (8).

The Court has an undoubted power to visit a locality, and this has been made clear by statutory provision in the new rule 18, Order XVIII of the present Code of Civil Procedure, taken from the Supreme Court Rules in England. The powers thus given will be nugatory unless the Court could use the result of its local inspection for certain purposes, viz., "for the purpose of enabling the tribunal to understand the questions that are being raised, to follow the evidence, and to apply the evidence." In certain cases, as observed by Farwell, J, in Bourne v. Swan and Edgar Ld. (9) "It is the eye-sight of the Judge that is the ultimate test." That principle was applied to the case of Lakmidas Khushal

v. Bhaiji Khushal (10), where the dispute was as to a passage and it was held that the most satisfactory test was to go to the field and to see for himself whether the witnesses for the plaintiff were speaking the truth or not, and hence the Judge was right in visiting the spot and disbelieving the plaintiff's witnesses because no such passage was visible and disallowing the plaintiff's claim without examining the defendants' witnesses. In such a case it was held that the "eye was the Judge" as enunciated by Farwell, J., and in some other cases by the House of Lords. It was further pointed out in the aforesaid Bombay case that, although it is desirable that a Judge should place the result of his local inspection on the record, yet the omission to do so is a purely formal defect and would not necessarily vitiate the judgment.

The dispute in the present case related to a wall on the north of the plaintiff's house and a Ghat to the east of his house. Issue No. 3 related to the wall and issue No. 4 to the Ghat. The case was one of encroachment, the plaintiff's and the defendants' houses being contiguous. The plaintiff's case was that there were two contiguous walls between these two houses, whereas the defendants denied it. Both parties gave conflicting evidence. I think that, as observed in the Bombay case, the Munsif in visiting the spot adopted what was the most satisfactory test available to him for finding out which party's case was true. It was not only natural but proper for him to accept the case and the evidence of the party which agreed with his personal observation, and to reject the case and the evidence of the party which was in conflict with his view of the locality and necessarily his decision will be based upon his personal observation. This in itself will not be any ground, as the learned Subordinate Judge has supposed, for setting aside the decision of the Munsif, nor can the decision of the Munsif be set aside because the learned Subordinate Judge found it "difficult to exclude the observations of the learned Munsif from the other evidence on the point." In this the learned Subordinate Judge has begged the question before him as to whether there was any evidence on the point, apart from the local inspection of the Munsif. If there was such evidence, the fact that the Munsif used his observation for the purpose of accepting that evidence or rejecting that which was contrary to his observation, will not vitiate his finding.

Whatever may be said of issue No. 3, which related to the disputed wall, the decision of the Munsif on issue No. 4 is based upon the report of the Commissioner and the oral evidence on the record referred to by him. As to the title of the plaintiff the Munsif seems to have based his finding entirely upon the evidence oral and documentary and there is no reference to any inspection of his; so also his finding upon issue No. 6 relating to the removal of the material from the disputed wall. The learned Subordinate Judge has not pointed out in his judgment which part of the finding of the Munsif was not supported by any evidence on the record apart from his own observation. In fact, the learned Subordinate Judge did not go into the evidence at all. He was, therefore, not competent to set aside the decision of the Munsif and to remand the case for re trial unless he had examined the evidence and held that the Munsif's findings were not supported by any evidence but were solely based upon the result of his local inspection.

I, therefore, set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge and remand the case to him to re-hear the appeal and to dispose of it on merits. If, on examination of the evidence on the record, he still finds that the finding of the Munsif upon any issue was arrived at solely upon his local inspection, and not upon any evidence on the record, he will be competent to remand the issue for re-trial. The costs of this appeal will abide the result of the case.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 86 — Ruling Chief, suit against—Consent of Governor-General not obtained—Suit, whether maintainable.

Plaintiff held certain lands of the defendant, a Ruling Chief, for which he paid no rent. Defendant applied for resumption of the muafi and the Court assessed rent against the plaintiff who brought the present suit for a declaration that he held a heritable right to remain in possession of the land without payment of rent. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had not obtained the consent of the Governor-General in Council under section 86 of the Civil Procedure Code, to sue the defendant. Plaintiff appealed and it was contended that as he was suing as a tenant of immoveable property, the suit was maintainable under the fifth proviso to section 86 of the Code without the consent of the Governor General:

Held, that the suit was not by plaintiff as a tenant of immoveable property, and had been rightly dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kheri, dated the 23rd December 1918.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lachman Das, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. N. N. Ghoshal, for Respondents Nos 2 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—The village of Amethi in the Kheri District belonged to the Isanagar Estate. It was sold by that Estate on the 23rd December 1910 to Raja i Rajgan Maharaja Jagat Jit Singh, Ruler of the Kapurthala State. Thakur Mahipat Singh, father of Amir Singh, plaintiff-appellant, held certain lands, in this village for which he paid no rent. On the 14th December 1911 the Maharaja of Kapurthala applied to have the muafi resumed. On the 30th September 1912 the Court assessed rent against Mahipat Singh. That decision was upheld in appeal. Mahipat Singh died in 1916. His son Amir Singh then brought a suit against the Maharaja of Kapurthala, the Isanagar Estate under the management of the Court of Wards, and the Secretary of State for India in Council for a declaration that he had a proprietary and heritable right to remain in possession of the land without payment of rent. The suit was dismissed. He appeals.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has confined himself to one point. The suit was dismissed as against the Maharaja of Kapurthala, because the plaintiff had not obtained the consent of the Governor-General in Council to sue the Maharaja in the Kheri Courts. It was held that, in absence of such consent, the suit must fail under the provisions of section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The only point with which we are concerned is whether the learned Subordinate Judge is right on this point. The learned Counsel for the appellant admits that the suit was rightly dismissed as against the Isanagar Estate and the Secretary of State for India in Council. The point before us presents no difficulty. There cannot be the slightest doubt in our opinion that the failure to obtain the consent in question involved the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit. The Maharaja of Kapurthala is a Ruling Chief. Section 85 refers to any Sovereign, Prince, or Ruling Chief, whether in subordinate alliance with the British Government or otherwise, and whether residing within or without British India. The words "such Prince or Chief" in section 86 summarise the previous description.

The learned Counsel for the appellant suggested that his client was entitled to come under the fifth provision of section 86 and that it was not necessary for him to obtain the consent in question as he was suing as a tenant of immoveable property. Our finding on this point is that he was not suing as a tenant of immoveable property.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed. The appellant will pay his own costs and the separate costs of the three respondents in all Courts.

Appeal dismissed.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 165 OF 1920.

July 12, 1920.

EMPEROR—NON-APPLICANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 439, 476—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Sanction to prosecute granted by Revenue Court—High Court, whether can interfere.

The High Court has no power, either under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, to revise an order passed by a Revenue Court under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the trial of a person for an offence under the Indian Penal Code. [p. 915, col. 2.]

The fact that the order is described as having been passed "in a miscellaneous criminal case" does not make it one passed by a Magistrate, if it is signed by the officer making it as a Revenue Officer. [p. 915, col. 2.]

Revision against an order in Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 1 of 1920, decided, on the 18th June 1920, by the Deputy Commissioner, Seoni.

FACTS appear from the following order of the Deputy Commissioner :—

ORDER.—These proceedings have been taken up under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, against Maneklal Kalar of Sudamapur, calling upon him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 471, Indian Penal Code, for producing and using a forged document in a Court knowing it to be forged.

2. The facts have been fully set forth in my order, dated 19th June 1919, in Revenue Appeal No. III-1 of 1918-1919, a copy of which will be placed on record. Some explanation of the delay in taking up these proceedings is necessary. A copy of the above order was forwarded to the District Superintendent of Police for investigation as to the genuineness of the Will, dated 1st November 1918 (Exhibit A). This investigation was stayed under the orders of my locum tenens, dated 22nd September 1919, pending disposal of the revenue appeal in the mutation case by the Financial Commissioner. There was further delay in completing the investigation owing to the absence, for some months, on leave of the handwriting expert for India who was consulted by the appellant.

3. The points for determination are:—Whether the Will (Exhibit A) is a forged document; (2) whether Maneklal knew that it was forged; (3) whether he produced it or had it produced in the Court of the Tahsildar in the mutation proceedings; (4) whether he should be considered as a party to those proceedings; (5) whether in view of the wording of section 476, read with section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, I have jurisdiction to order Maneklal's prosecution.

4. There is no direct evidence as to the forgery. The very character of the offence renders it ordinarily impossible to get such evidence as the parties who are present at such a transaction are directly or indirectly concerned in the offence. The Circle Inspector of Police has collected the best evidence that it was possible to collect under the circumstances. Witnesses may lie but documentary evidence cannot. He has produced several documents signed or written and signed by Bhayalal, deceased. The documents, Exhibits B to P, are proved to have been signed by Bhayalal. The receipts, Exhibits C and D, and the bond, Exhibit L, are proved to have been written by Bhayalal himself. Several of the above documents are security bonds connected with excise contracts and have been verified by the Tahsildar or the Naib-Tahsildar. The usual signature of the deceased Bhayalal was in four Hindi letters 'Bhayalal.' But in some cases he has undoubtedly used five letters. For his signature or name, e. g., his name at the commencement of the document, Exhibit D "Bhayalal." A comparison of the signatures on the documents B to H and J to P and of the handwriting of Bhayalal in the documents C, D and L with the signature on the Will, Exhibit A, clearly shows, in my opinion, that the latter is a colourable imitation of his real signature on the fourteen documents. I have not considered it necessary at this stage to call up and examine the handwriting expert. Maneklal has produced four documents, viz., Exhibits D-1, D-3, D-4 and D-5 which are alleged to have been signed by Bhayalal. These documents have not been proved to have been signed by the deceased and I, therefore, abstain from making any comparison. Whether Bhayalal wrote his signatures with four letters or with five does not settle the question at issue. The marked difference in the handwriting between the signature on Exhibit A and the signatures on Exhibits B to P leads to the irresistible conclusion that the signature on Exhibit A is a forgery. Apart from this, documentary evidence which is of course most important in such cases, as I have stated in my order in the revenue appeal, the circumstances of the case point to the Will being a forgery. Maneklal is an intelligent and literate malguzar and is or was member of the Local Board. He put in in the mutation case application, dated 2nd December 1918, on behalf of the minors Dalchand and Premlal claiming the property for the minors as cousins of the deceased Bhayalal. Now the Will is dated 1st November 1918 and it is most extraordinary that there is no mention of this important document in the application presented, month and a day after the former had been executed. The Will appears for the first time in the proceedings of the 21st December 1918. I am satisfied that the Will was an afterthought, as Maneklal discovered that the claim of the minors on the ground of relationship was absolutely untenable.

5. That Bhayalal and his wife were living together till the date of his death is not denied. His wife died a few days after he died. Bhayalal was evidently in perfect health when he executed the alleged Will. It is proved that his wife bore two children who died. They were both young and there was every prospect of their having more children. Is it then likely that Bhayalal would bequeath all his landed property to two very distant relations simply out of gratitude to Maneklal or latter's deceased's brother Sheoraj who had managed the property for him during his minority.

6. The idea is a preposterous one. The ground put forward for the execution of the Will is that he had quarrelled with his wife who was extravagant and was squandering his money (sic) her relations. It is very unusual amongst people of this class, for the wife to hold the purse strings. If, as is alleged, he was going about complaining to all and sundry that his wife was extravagant and was squandering his money, if matters had gone so far, was there anything to prevent his keeping all the cash in his own hands or his turning her out? Then the Will is a very simple document and Bhayalal could write even a formal document like a bond for himself. Would he get hold of an Ahir cultivator to write out the Will for him? The matter would be different if a professional scribe had been asked to write the Will. Then the execution of a Will by a young man belonging to Bhayalal's class is in itself very suspicious, to say the least.

7. It is suggested that Bhayalal's wife was a kept woman. The evidence shows that she was his legally married wife and the suggestion to the contrary was evidently not seriously made.

8. That Maneklal produced the Will, Exhibit A, is proved. That he must have known the document to be a forgery, if he was not a party to the forgery, is equally clear.

9. It is contended that Maneklal appeared in the Revenue Court merely as a guardian of the minors, Dalchand and Premlal, that he was not a party to the proceedings and that, therefore, his prosecution under section 476 read with section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be ordered.

10. Dalchand is Maneklal's son and Premlal is his nephew. Both are under his own protection. The Counsel for Maneklal has cited in support of his contention Rup Chand v. Dasodha (1) and Govinda Iyer v. Rex (2). The first case was a civil suit and a question whether a guardian ad litem was a party to the suit was raised in connection with the period of limitation in the interest of the minor and it was held that a guardian was not a party to the suit and the suit was not, therefore, time-barrrd. That ruling cannot be applied to the present case when there is no question of protecting the interest of a minor against the uncle of his guardian. The second case cited is more important. It was held by the Madras Full Bench that the words under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code "any offence in section 195" incorporate the conditions laid down by section 195, and a Court can take action under section 476 only under such conditions. In that case a man whose prosecution for forgery had been ordered was a clerk of the plaintiff in whose favour the document which was forged had been alleged to have been executed.

MOHANDAS KARAMCHAND GANDHI, In re.

It was held that the clerk who appeared on behalf of his employer was not a party to the case and, therefore, his prosecution under section 476 read with section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, could not be legally ordered. The present case, however, is quite different. The minors, on whose behalf Maneklal produced the document, are quite innocent. He had a document forged in favour of his son and his nephew, he produced it and led evidence to prove it. Was he or was he not a party to the mutation proceedings? I hold that he certaintly was. He took possession of the property on the strength of the Will and during his lifetime or, at all events, till his son and nephew who are living with him attained majority, he would get the benefit of the property. For the purposes of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, therefore, I have no hesitation in holding that he was a party to the mutation proceedings I am fortified in this view by the case, published in Keshav Narayan, In re (3) (vide Sohoni's Criminal Procedure Code, page 991, 9th Edition), "All that is required is that such an offence as is referred to in this section should be either committed before the Court or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding. If that condition is satisfied, the circumstance that the accused is neither a party nor a witness is not relevant. It is competent to a Court to sanction the prosecution under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, by the minor's guardian who applies for the Probate of a forged Will." For these reasons I order, under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecution of Maneklal, son of Bodhi, under section 471, Indian Penal Code. Mr. Diwakar, Sub Divisional Magistrate, has dealt with the case on the revenue side. I, therefore, direct that the accused's case be taken up by Mr. Chandorkar, First Class Magistrate. Maneklal to be bound over in personal recognizance bond for Rs. 1,000 with two sureties for Rs. 1,000 each to appear before the First Class Magistrate on Monday, the 21st June 1920, as the two intervening days are a holiday and a Sunday.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—The order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the trial of the applicant Maneklal for an offence under section 471 of the Indian Penal Code has been passed by a Revenue Officer. This Court has no power either under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, or under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, to revise an order passed by a Revenue Officer. It is said that Mr. Rustomji Faridoonji has passed the order as a District Magistrate since it purports to have been passed according to the heading of the order "in Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 1 of 1920." The offence appears to have come to Mr. Rustomji Faridoonji's notice during the hearing of a revenue appeal and he has signed the order as a Deputy Commissioner. The order has, in my opinion, been passed by him as a Revenue Officer and the fact that a wrong heading has been given can make no difference.

The application is rejected.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION No. 449 OF 1919.

Contempt of Court—Publishing and commenting on document forming part of the record of a pending case—High Court, power and duty of, to protect inferior Courts.

It is not permissible to publish comments on or extracts from any pending proceedings in a Court unless the leave of the Court is first obtained. [p. 918, col. 1]

Any act done or writing published calculated to obstruct or interfere with the due course of justice or the lawful process of the Courts is a contempt of Court. [p. 919, col. 1.]

It is a contempt to publish any part of the record of a case while proceedings are pending. The High Court has power to protect Courts of inferior jurisdiction and in proper cases it should extend its protection to Courts in the Mofussil over which it exercises supervision. [p. 920, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MARTEN, J.—The respondents Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi and Mahadev Haribhai Desai are the editor and publisher respectively of a newspaper called Young India. They are charged with contempt of Court in publishing in that newspaper, on the 6th August 1919, a letter dated the 22nd April 1919 and written by the District Judge of Ahmedabad (Mr. B. C. Kennedy) to the Registrar of this Court, and also with publishing comments on that letter. The gist of the charge is that the letter in question was a private official letter forming part of certain proceedings then pending in this Court, and that the comments which the respondents made in their newspaper were comments on that pending case.

The facts are not in dispute, and may be stated briefly. The case which I have referred to is Jivanlal Varajrai Desai, In re (1). It arose under the disciplinary jurisdiction of this Court, in consequence of the above letter from the District Judge, whereby he submitted for the determination of this Court the question of the Pleaders of the Ahmedabad Court who had signed what is known as the "Satyagraha pledge," whereby they undertook (amongst other things) "to refuse civilly to obey these laws, (viz., the Rowlatt Act) and such other laws as a committee to be hereafter appointed may think fit." The learned District Judge also mentioned the names of two Barristers who had signed the pledge. The point was whether that pledge was consistent with their duties as Advocates and Pleaders. The result of that letter was that notices were issued by this Court, on the 12th July 1919, against the Advocates and Pleaders in question, and it was eventually held, on the 15th October 1919, by a Bench of this Court consisting of my Lord the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Heaton and Mr. Justice Kajiji that the Satyagraha pledge which these Advocates and Pleaders had taken was not consistent with the performance of their duties as such to the Court and the public.

Meanwhile, viz., on the 6th August 1919, the present respondents had published the letter in question in Young India, and made there the comments complained of. They had obtained the letter in this way. For the purposes of the defence to the charge, a copy of the District Judge's letter had been supplied by the High Court to Jivanlal V. Desai, one of the Counsel in question. He gave a copy to another respondent Kalidas J. Jhaveri, and the latter handed it to the Editor of Young India, who is reputed to be the author of the Satyagraha pledge. For his conduct in so doing, Mr. Kalidas J. Jhaveri was severely reprimanded by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Heaton on the 10th November 1919: see Kalidas J. Jhaveri, In re (2).

I may now turn to the newspaper itself. On page 1 under the heading "O'Dwyerism in Ahmedabad," the District Judge's letter to this Court is set out in full. On page 2 there is a leading article headed "Shaking Civil Resisters." We have read the whole of it and I need only refer to some of its more salient features. At the outset, it mentions an alleged declaration by Sir Michael O'Dwyer of his intention of taking note of the anti-Rowlatt legislation, agitation and passive resistance demonstration before there was any disturbance of the peace. It then states that Sir Michael had succeeded to an eminent degree in disturbing the peace in the Punjab and that "the O'Dwyrean spirit" had travelled to Burma. Then follows a comment on the Local Government there. The article then proceeds to say that an echo of the spirit is heard nearer Bombay, and mentions the above High Court notice to the Ahmedabad lawyers, and that it was prompted by the above letter from the District Judge, and that it remains to be seen what action will be taken by the High Court when the case is argued before it. The article then states that the District Judge has prejudged the issue: that he has made an impudent suggestion which is then quoted: that the adjective "impudent" is used advisedly: that his imputation would be ungentlemanly in a stranger and is unpardonable in his case. The article then suggests that the last paragraph of the letter means that the two Barristers would be charged and convicted by the Special Bench, and that it was not the fault of the District Judge that they had not been so charged, and that the District Judge had made up his mind that they had committed a criminal breach of the law of the land. Then, in the concluding portion, the article states that these traducers of civil resistance and civil resisters are becoming the instruments for propagating Bolshevism, i.e., the spirit of lawlessness accompanied with violence, and that the Government of Burma, the Government of the Punjab and the District Judge of Ahmedabad, are all, in their own way, endeavouring forcibly to impose their will upon civil resisters, but that those who are trying to crush the spirit of civil resistance are but fanning the fire of Bolshevism. It will be noticed that this article shows, on the face of it, that the proceedings were then sub judice, and that it nowhere mentions Mr. Kennedy's name, but refers to him throughout as the District Judge of Ahmedabad.

After the proceedings against the Pleaders had been disposed of the Editor of Young India was asked, on the 18th October 1919, to give an explanation regarding the publication of the letter and the above comments. Certain correspondence thereupon passed between him and the Registrar of this Court acting under the directions of the Chief Justice. We have read all this correspondence, and I need not repeat it in full. In his letter of the 22nd October, the respondent, Gandhi, wrote:

"In my humble opinion, I was within the rights of a journalist in publishing the letter in question and making comments thereon. I believed the letter to be of great public importance and one that called for public criticism."

The reply of the 31st October was that this could not be regarded as a satisfactory explanation, but that the Chief Justice was willing to concede that the editor was unaware that he was exceeding the privilege of a journalist, provided he would publish in Young India an apology in the form therewith enclosed.

On the 7th November the respondent, Gandhi, telegraphed that he was referring the matter to Counsel.

On the 11th December, the Acting Advocate-General initiated the present proceedings by applying for a rule nisi against the respondents. This application was granted by Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice Crump on that day, but the rule itself was not actually issued till the 19th December, and it bears the latter date. Meanwhile, a further letter, dated the 11th December, had been received from the respondent, Gandhi. The writer expressed his inability to publish the suggested apology, and stated that in publishing and commenting on the letter, he had performed a useful public duty at a time when there was great tension and when even the judiciary was being affected by the popular prejudice, but that he had had no desire whatsoever to prejudge the issues which their Lordships had had to decide. Then, after referring to the honour of journalism and to his membership of the Bombay Bar and its traditions, the writer stated that, in similar circumstances, he would not act differently, and that he could not conscientiously offer any apology, and that, if that explanation was not considered sufficient, he would respectfully suffer the penalty.

Subsequently, at the respondents' request, the hearing of the rule was postponed, and on the 27th February 1920 they made the following statements.—

The respondent, Gandhi, stated:—

"With reference to the rule nisi issued against me I beg to state as follows:—Before the issue of the rule certain correspondence passed between the Registrar of the Honourable Court and myself. On the 11th December I addressed to the Registrar a letter which sufficiently explains my conduct I, therefore, attach a copy of the same letter. I regret, that I have not found it possible to accept the advice given by his Lordship the Chief Justice. Moreover, I have been unable to accept the advice because I do not consider that I have committed either a legal or a moral breach by publishing Mr. Kennedy's letter or by commenting on the contents thereof. I am sure that this Honourable Court would not want me to tender an apology unless it be sincere and express regret for an action which I have held to be the privilege and duty of a journalist. I shall, therefore, cheerfully and respectfully accept the punishment that this Honourable Court may be pleased to impose upon me for the vindication of the majesty of law.

"I wish to say, with reference to the notice served on Mr. Mahadeo Desai, the publisher, that he published it simply upon my request and advice."

The respondent Desai stated:—

"With reference to the rule nisi served upon me, I beg to state that I have read the statement made by the Editor of Young India and associate myself, with the reasoning adopted by him in justification of his action. I shall, therefore, cheerfully and respectfully abide by any penalty that this Honourable Court may be pleased to inflict on me."

At the hearing before us, both the respondents, appeared in person. The respondent Gandhi stated (inter alia) that he did not want to go beyond the above statements already made by him; that he would accept any ruling of law laid down by this Court, and that, while submitting he had not committed any contempt of Court, he did not want to argue the point. The respondent, Desai, stated that he associated himself with his co respondent.

As to the general principles of law to be applied to this case, there can, I think, be no doubt. Speaking generally, it is not permissible to publish comments on or extracts from any pending proceedings in this Court, unless the leave of the Court be first obtained. Many good reasons may be advanced for this, but the underlying principle is, I think, that of the due administration of justice for the public benefit, one incident of which demands that, as a matter of common fairness, both parties shall be heard at the same time and in the presence of each other on proper evidence by an independent and unprejudiced tribunal. That object would be frustrated if newspapers were free to comment on or to make extracts from proceedings which were still sub judice. It matters not whether those comments and extracts favour prosecutor or accused, plaintiff or defendant. The vice is the interference with what is the Court's duty and not a newspaper's viz., the decision of the pending case.

In Rex v. Parke (3) Mr. Justice Wills in delivering the judgment of the Court (the other members of which were Lord Alverstone and Mr. Justice Channell) said at pages 436 7 as follows:—

"The reason why the publication of articles like those with which we have to deal is treated as a contempt of Court is because their tendency and sometimes their object is to deprive the Court of the power of doing that which is the end for which it exists—namely, to administer justice duly, impartially, and with reference solely to the facts judicially brought before it. Their tendency is to reduce the Court which has to try the case to impotence, so far as the effectual elimination of prejudice and prepossession is concerned. It is difficult to conceive an apter description of such conduct than is conveyed by the expression 'contempt of Court.'"

In Rex v. Davies (4) Mr. Justice Wills again delivered the judgment of the Court. At page 40 the learned Judge says:—

"What then is the principle which is the root of and underlies the cases in which persons have been punished for attacks upon Courts and interferences with the due execution of their orders? It will be found to be not the purpose of protecting either the Court as a whole or the individual Judges of the Court from a repetition of them, but of protecting the public, and especially those who either voluntarily or by compulsion, are subject to its jurisdiction, from the mischief they will incur if the authority of the tribunal be undermined or impaired."

Lower down on the same page, the learned Judge refers with approval to an undelivered judgment of Wilmot, C. J., in 1765 which shewed that—

"The real offence is the wrong done to the public by weakening the authority and influence of a tribunal which exists for their good alone."

So, too, in Helmore v. Smith (5) Lord Justice Bowen says:—

"The object of the discipline enforced by the Court in case of contempt of Court is not to vindicate the dignity of the Court or the person of the Judge, but to prevent undue interference with the administration of justice."

In Reg. v. Gray (6) Lord Russell of Killowen, in speaking of one class of contempt, said at page 40:—

"Any act done or writing published calculated to obstruct or interfere with the due course of justice or the lawful process of the Courts is a contempt of Court."

Within that class fall comments on pending proceedings, and also, I think, premature publication of documents. Earlier on the same page, the Lord Chief Justice had dealt with another class of contempt which he thus describes:—

"Any act done or writing published calculated to bring a Court or a Judge of the Court into contempt, or to lower his authority, is a contempt of Court."

Within this class comes the personal scurrilous abuse of a Judge as a Judge, which was the case the Court there had to deal with. It was this class of contempt which Lord Hardwicke characterised in 1742 as "scandalising a Court or a Judge." Speaking for myself, I do not think that the expression is a happy one as it is open to misconstruction, and I doubt whether it is much used by modern lawyers. At any rate, I personally prefer Lord Russell's own description of this particular class of contempt.

It makes no difference, I think, that the alleged abuse here was of a District, and not of a High Court, Judge. Rex v. Davies (4) shews that in England the High Court has power to protect the Courts of inferior jurisdiction and that in a proper case it should do so. I think the same power exists in India, and that, subject to the precautions which Lord Russell mentions on pages 40 and 41, this Court should extend its protection to all Courts in the Mofussil, over which it exercises supervision.

As regards the premature publication of documents, the law is thus stated in Oswald on Contempt, 3rd Edition, page 95:—

"Printing, even without comments and circulating the brief pleadings, petition, or evidence of one side only, is a contempt."

So, too, in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume VII, page 287, it is stated:—

"It is a contempt to publish copies of the pleadings or evidence in a cause, while proceedings are pending."

For these propositions, cases beginning from 1754 are cited and they include instances of affidavits, winding-up petitions, and statements of claim, which latter correspond to plaints in this country. One can easily see the evils which would arise if it were permissible to publish a plaint containing (say) charges of fraud against some respectable man before he could even put in his answer, and long before the charges could be judicially determined.

I may refer to one more case, not because it lays down any new law, but because it brings the English authorities down to date, and illustrates the restrictions imposed there on the liberty of the press, which, as pointed out by Lord Russell in Reg. v. Gray (6), is in these matters "no greater and no less than the liberty of every subject of the King." The case is Rex v. Empire News Limited (7) and was heard by the Lord Chief Justice of England and Mr. Justice Avory and Mr. Justice Sankey. There the newspaper had commented on a pending murder case, but did not attempt to justify its action in so doing, and the proprietors and editor expressed their deepest regret and contrition to the Court. In delivering judgment, the Earl of Reading said:—

"The Court could not permit the investigation of murder to be taken out of the hands of the proper authorities and to be carried on by newspapers. The liberty of the individual, even when he was suspected of crime and indeed even more so when he was charged with crime, must be protected and it was the function of that Court to prevent the publication of articles which were likely to cause prejudice. The only doubt in the case was whether the Court ought to commit the editor to prison.

"The Court had come to the conclusion that, in the circumstances, it must mark its sense of the offence committed, which was an offence both by the proprietors and editor, by imposing a fine of £1,000."

The principles of law then being clear, how ought they to be applied to the facts of this particular case? In my judgment those principles prohibited the publication of the District Judge's letter pending the hearing of the notices issued by the High Court. It was contended by the respondent, Gandhi, that that letter was written by Mr. Kennedy in his private capacity, and not as District Judge. I think that contention is erroneous. The letter is an official letter written by the District Judge in the exercise of his duties as such, and submitting the case to the High Court for orders. As my brother Hayward has pointed out to me, the letter follows the procedure laid down in the Civil Circulars of this Court in cases of alleged misconduct by a Pleader (see page 259). It very properly sets out what the learned Judge considers to be the facts both for and against the Pleaders, and gives his reasons for bringing the matter before the High Court. Indeed, if he had not done so, he would presumably have been asked by the High Court for further particulars before they took any action. The letter is on lines quite familiar to this Court in other cases where the Sessions Judge in the exercise of his duties as such brings some matter before this Court with a view to the exercise of its exceptional powers. I may instance criminal references where the Sessions Judge, for the reasons given in his official letter, recommends the revision of some illegal or inadequate sentence which has been passed by a Subordinate Court and which the High Court alone can alter in certain contingencies. If, in the present case, the District Judge's letter contained any statements which the respondent Pleaders or Barristers contended were inaccurate, that would be a matter for decision at the hearing of the notices, when all they had to say would be fully considered.

But even if the letter was written by Mr. Kennedy in his private capacity, I do not think it would make any substantial difference as regards mere publication. The letter would still form part, and a most important part, of the pending proceedings and the record thereof, and I do not think that any substantial difference can be drawn between it and the other classes of documents mentioned in the authorities cited in Oswald and in Halsbury to which I have already referred.

In my judgment, therefore, the publication of this letter was a contempt of Court.

That brings me to the comments made in the newspaper, including the heading "O'Dwyerism in Ahmedabad" under which the letter was published. These comments are not only comments on pending proceedings, but are of a particularly intemperate and reprehensible character. They prejudge the case and tend to undermine any decision which the High Court may come to at the trial. They also amount, in my opinion, to what Lord Russell describes as "scurrilous abuse of the Judge as such." In this latter connection, the question whether the letter was written by Mr. Kennedy in his private or in his judicial capacity becomes material, but, as I have already stated, it was, in my judgment, written in his judicial capacity.

Accordingly, on the authorities which I have already referred to, these comments are clearly a contempt of Court and come within both the classes to which Lord Russell refers, and in my judgment they constitute a serious contempt of Court.

We have carefully considered the various statements made by the respondents, and invited them at the hearing to give any intelligible explanation or excuse for their conduct. None such was forthcoming. In his letter of the 11th Decembrr 1919 the respondent, Gandhi, contends that in publishing and commenting on the letter he "performed a useful public duty at a time when there was great tension and when even the judiciary was being affected by the popular prejudice." Common sense would answer that if that tension and popular prejudice existed it would be increased rather than diminished by abuse of the local Judge and that that could not be the public duty of any good citizen.

But there would seem to be some strange misconceptions in the minds of the respondents as to the legitimate liberties of a journalist. Otherwise the respondent Gandhi could hardly have contended before us—as he in fact did—that if a son brought a suit against a father, and if a journalist thought that the son's action was wrong, the journalist would be justified in holding the son up to public ridicule in the public press, notwithstanding that the suit was still undecided. I need hardly say that this contention is quite erroneous. It may, however, be that principles which are quite familiar in England are imperfectly known or understood in India, and that the respondents have paid more attention to the liberty of the press than to the duties which accompany that and every other liberty.

This has much weighed with me in considering what order the Court ought to pass in this case. We have large powers and, in appropriate cases, can commit offenders to prison for such period as we think fit and can impose fines of such amount as we may judge right. But just as our powers are large, so ought we, I think, to use them with discretion and with moderation, remembering that the only object we have in view is to enforce the due administration of justice for the public benefit.

In the present case, the Court has very seriously considered whether it ought not to impose a substantial fine on one, if not both, of the respondents. But, on the whole, I think it sufficient for the Court to state the law in terms which I hope will leave no room for doubt in the future, and to confine our order to severely reprimanding the respondents and cautioning them both as to their future conduct. That accordingly is the order I think we should pass in the present case.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur. A contempt of Court was, in my opinion, committed in the mere publication of the letter of Mr. Kennedy before the trial of the matter by this Court. It might not have been realised but the reason for the rule has been explained by my brother Marten and shown to rest on numerous precedents quoted under paragraph 615 at page 287 of Volume VII of Halsbury's Laws of England.

A contempt of Court of a more serious nature was, in my opinion, committed in commenting in the particular manner on that letter. It amounted clearly to "scandalising" Mr. Kennedy as District Judge within the dicta of Lord Hardwicke quoted by Lord Russell in Reg. v. Gray (6). It was Mr. Kennedy's duty, according to established practice, to report the matter in question as District Judge for the orders of the High Court. It was, in my opinion, his duty under the general powers of superintendence vested in him as District Judge under section 9 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act, 1869, and the duty was, moreover, expressly prescribed as follows:—

"The Judge who notices the misconduct of the Pleader should charge the Pleader therewith and, after such preliminary enquiry as he may think fit to make, should write to the Registrar requesting him to lay the charge before the Honourable the Chief Justice and Judges, who, if necessary, will call on the Pleader for any further explanation he may wish to make. The Judges will then consider the whole matter in Chambers; after which the matter will be determined by a Chamber Resolution or, where necessary, by formal proceedings in Court," by paragraph 14, of Chapter XVIII at page 259 of the Civil Circulars Manual of the High Court. It has, therefore, become our duty to protect the proceedings of the District Judge under the powers shown by the precedents of Rex v. Parke (3) and Rex v. Davies (4) to be vested in us as Judges of the High Court.

A contempt of Court of an even more serious nature was, in my opinion, further committed, in that the comments tended to interfere with a fair trial and to prejudice public justice. They tended to substitute what has been termed a newspaper trial for the regular proceedings before the established tribunal, the High Court. The precedents for the position include those already quoted as well as the later cases of Higgins v. Richards (8) and Rex v. Empire News Limited (7), quoted by brother Marten. The respondents have not denied the facts nor seriously disputed the law. They have expressed their readiness in their replies to submit to whatever punishment might be imposed on them for what they have termed "the vindication of the majesty of law" by the High Court.

(8) (1912) 28 T. L. R. 202.

FOIJUDDI v. EMPEROR.

It is difficult to appreciate the position taken up by the respondents. They have expressed their inability to apologise formally but have, at the same time, represented their readiness to submit to any punishment meted out to them. It is probable that the editor, the respondent Gandhi, did not realize that he was breaking the law and there would be no doubt, if that were so, that it was not realised by his publisher, the respondent Desai. The respondents seem to have posed not as law breakers but rather as passive resisters of the law. It would, therefore, be sufficient, in my opinion, to enunciate unmistakeably for them the law in these matters, to severely reprimand them for their proceedings and to warn them of the penalties imposable by the High Court.

KAJIJI, J.—I concur.

PER CURIAM.—The order of the Court will, therefore, be : "The Court finds the charges proved, it severely reprimands the respondents and cautions them both as to their future conduct."

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 211, 216—Sessions trial—Witnesses for defence summoned, but not in attendance—Application at late stage to enforce their attendance, refusal of, effect of.

Accused, before the Committing Magistrate, filed a list of his witnesses and they were summoned to attend the Sessions Court. Some of them, however, failed to attend and, when all the defence witnesses who had attended had been examined and the case was ready for hearing arguments, the accused made an application to enforce the attendance of the absent witnesses, but the Sessions Judge refused the application on the sole ground that it should have been made earlier :

Held, that as the refusal of the application was not based on the ground that the Judge was satisfied that the evidence of the witnesses would be immaterial, his refusal had vitiated the trial.

Appeal against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Faridpur, dated the 1st November 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri (with him Babus Atulya Charan Bose and Jagat Chandra Bose), for the Appellants.—In this case the accused were tried with the help of a Jury by the learned Sessions Judge who convicted them. Before the trial took place the accused gave a list of four witnesses to be examined for the defence. They were summoned duly but they did not appear on the day of the trial. On the 4th day of the trial, an application was made to summon those witnesses, but it was refused by the learned Sessions Judge on the ground that the application ought to have been made earlier.

My first submission would be that the trial is vitiated by not giving the accused an opportunity to summon those witnesses on their behalf and I submit that the case must go back for re trial.

Under section 213, Criminal Procedure Code, the accused is required to give a list of the witnesses and that was done and thus the requirement of section 213, Criminal Procedure Code, has been complied with.

Under section 216, Criminal Procedure Code, no discretion is left to the Magistrate to summon the witnesses. The Magistrate "shall summon such of the witnesses." 'Shall' indicates no discretion to the Magistrate.

Here the trial began on the 27th October 1919 and the prosecution case was concluded on the 29th. On the 30th October the application was made to summon the witnesses.

Under section 289, clause (1), Criminal Procedure Code, the accused is entitled to adduce evidence and the learned Sessions Judge erred in law in refusing the application.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.—It is the duty of the defence to inform the Judge about the witnesses who did not appear. This was not done when the trial took place. It was only at the time of the argument that the application was pressed. I submit that the trial was not vitiated by this irregularity.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This appeal has been based by the learned Counsel who appears for the appellants on the grounds stated in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the petition. It appears that there were four witnesses whose names had been included in the list of persons whom the accused wished to be summoned to give evidence on their behalf, and the list had been handed in to the Magistrate's Court on behalf of the accused. These four persons did not attend the trial at the Sessions to which the accused had been committed, notwithstanding that summonses had been served upon them. The trial began on the 27th of October 1919, the prosecution case was concluded on the 29th and the defence case began on the same day, the 29th. On the 30th it appears that a petition was filed on behalf of the accused applying to have the four witnesses summoned to give evidence on their behalf. The learned Judge refused the application. This refusal was not based upon the ground that the learned Judge was satisfied that their evidence would be immaterial, but it was solely upon the ground that the application ought to have been made at an earlier date. The learned Additional Sessions Judge said: "There was no such prayer on the 1st date of trial, i. e., 27th October 1919, nor on the 2nd date nor on the 3rd, but on the 4th date when all the defence witnesses have been examined and the case is ready for hearing arguments, this petition for adjournment has been filed." There is nothing before us to enable us to judge whether the evidence of the four witnesses would be material or not, except the statement in the fifth paragraph of the petition "that those witnesses, if examined, would have proved that the disputed bari was in possession of Badaruddi and that the complainants party were the aggressors." In view of that statement I find it impossible to say that the evidence of these witnesses, if they had attended the trial, would not have been immaterial. Inasmuch as the trial took four days and the learned Counsel for the Crown says it was a heavy case and the facts of the case, so far as they were represented to the Jury, were enquired into and a verdict was given. I regret that we have to allow the appeal and set aside the verdict and the sentence. On the other hand, however, it is a matter of importance that the accused should have their witnesses (whose names they had mentioned before the Magistrate and who had been summoned but did not attend) present at the trial in the Sessions Court. The learned Counsel for the Crown has pointed out that if an application such as this, which is not made until the last moment, is granted, considerable inconvenience and unnecessary expense and delay may be caused and for that reason this appeal ought not to be allowed. I quite appreciate the force of the learned Counsel's remarks—in fact the matter had occurred to me before he mentioned it, but I think that if proper precaution is taken by the learned Judges who are presiding over the trial at the Sessions Court, this kind of thing may be avoided. Steps may be taken by the learned Judges to see that the parties, at a sufficiently early stage of the trial, make any application with regard to the attendance of witnesses, which they desire. If they do not comply with the direction of the learned Judge to make their application with regard to the attendance of witnesses within a reasonable time, they cannot complain afterwards, if they make an application at the last moment, and such application is rejected.

For these reasons, in my judgment, this appeal must be allowed, the verdict and the sentence should be set aside and the matter should be remanded to the Sessions Court to be re-tried.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Case remanded.

SHAM LAL—PETITIONER

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer of case, when to be allowed.

Ordinarily, the transfer of a Criminal case ought not to be allowed. Where, however, there is some degree of association between the Magistrate and one or other of the parties to a case as, for instance, where a party has a financial hold on the Magistrate, the case ought not to be tried by that Magistrate.

Messrs. G. W. Dillon and A. P. Dube, for the Petitioner.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for transfer of a case under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, from the Court of an Honorary Magistrate. Transfers ought, in principle, to be very difficult to obtain because nothing so undermines the feeling of the responsibility of Magistrates and their own self-respect in the adjudication of cases as ordering transfers from them when they are once in possession of a case. But, on the other hand, when there is found to be a degree of association between the Magistrate and one or other of the parties to a case and when, moreover, it is found that one of the parties to the case has or may possibly have some financial hold over the Magistrate, it is very undesirable that the Magistrate should adjudicate in a case of that character. The evidence in relation to what I have called "some financial hold" is this. I am told, that an action was brought for commission against the Honorary Magistrate and that the plaintiff in that action got a decree for Rs. 300. Within a very short period of the decree Mahtab Singh, who was the plaintiff in that action, found himself a defendant in an action at the suit of Kanhaiya Lal, who is the complainant in the present criminal case part-heard before the Honorary Magistrate. The result of the action between Kanhaiya Lal and Mahtab Singh was that Mahtab Singh was decreed to be indebted to Kanhaiya Lal in the sum of Rs. 240. Now Mahtab Singh had an unsatisfied decree for Rs. 300 against the Honorary Magistrate and thereupon Kanhaiya Lal, the complainant in the criminal case and the next door neighbour of the Honorary Magistrate, attached that decree and, therefore, has put himself legally in a position to do a number of unpleasant things to the Honorary Magistrate or, possibly, to show favour to him. One need not go any further than just state the bare facts that the complainant in the criminal proceedings against Sham Lal holds an unsatisfied decree over the Magistrate again. In these circumstances, I think that this is one of those exceptional cases where a transfer ought to be allowed and under these conditions the case must be sent to the District Magistrate of Bijnor with a request to him that he will hear the matter of the complaints of Khanhaiya Lal against Sham Lal from the beginning to the conclusion and will decide as between the parties; but if, from any pressure of work, he finds himself unable to do it he is to be good enough to select a Magistrate whom he regards as being entirely competent and qualified to pronounce a just decision. The matter is one of some importance because Sham Lal did commence proceedings for malicious prosecution when the first complaint was dismissed by reason of the absence of Kanhaiya Lal and his witnesses and, therefore, as between the complainant and the defendant, there is a strong degree of hostility. In these circumstances, the application for transfer is allowed.

Application allowed.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1899), s. 466—Licensee for carrying on carrier's business and for the animals kept by him, whether should take out license also for premises where animals are kept.

A carrier must, in addition to a trade license take out a license for his animals if he keeps them and a license for the premises where he keeps them under section 466 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. [p. 925, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate, Howrah, dated the 5th December 1919.

Babus Monmatha Nath Mukherjee and Satindra Nath Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. R. C. Bonnerjee and Babus Bepin Chandra Mullick and Nagendra Nath Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Lewis and Company carry on a carrier's business. They have taken out a trade license under section 198 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. They have also taken out a license under section 193 of the Municipal Act for keeping carriages and animals under section 183 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. The Municipality contends that they are persons who are using certain premises for the purpose of keeping horses and cattle and that, under section 466, these premises ought to be licensed. Their contention is that these animals are let out on hire by the Company. The learned Magistrate has held that section 466 is not applicable. The evidence on the record on behalf of the prosecution is that the Company keep horses, buffaloes and bullocks in the premises in question, for hire, and they use them for their business. In cross examination the witness, S. N. Banerjee, License Inspector, says: "I never saw their cattle being sold nor their horses or cattle being let out on hire singly, that is, without carts."

The accused did not examine any witnesses, but apparently relied upon certain contracts which were produced before the Court.

It is argued on their behalf that, inasmuch as they are carrying on business as carriers and inasmuch as they have also taken out a license for keeping their horses, buffaloes and bullocks, no further license can be taken from them, because they do not hire out their cattle or horses. They strongly rely on these contracts which they contend are for traction only, a certain sum being paid to them for the purpose of carrying goods to and from certain Railways. The contract with the East Indian Railway says that, "the contractors shall and will at their own expense during the continuance of the contract by means of suitable covered vans drawn by horses or by any other faster or speedier power convey and carry loads to and from Howrah Railway Station," and certain other places therein named, and for that work they are to get so much per month.

The contract with the Eastern Bengal Railway is that, the company is to provide at their own expense a sufficient number of serviceable covered vehicles and means of traction for the carriage of goods, and they are to get a certain sum of money as specified in the contract.

The contract with the Bengal Nagpur Railway is that, the contractors shall provide at their own expense a sufficient number of covered vans drawn by horses for the carriage of goods, for this work they are to get Rs. 400 per month.

The evidence given on behalf of the prosecution in this case has not been contradicted that carriages and horses are let out on hire by the Company. There is no evidence that their work solely consists in carrying goods for the Railways. Even if that were so, they clearly let out their vehicles and draught animals on hire. The payment of a lump sum is by way of hire. No doubt the Municipality first took the view that since, for such carriages, horses and drivers were necessary, it could not be said that the horses alone were being hired out. A different view has now been taken by them and, we think, rightly. Section 466 is clear. The marginal note is no portion of the section. The Municipality is entitled to exercise control over the places where animals for hire and for other purposes mentioned in the section are kept. Take the case of a person doing business in milk. He has to take out a trade license for it. If he keeps milch cows he has also to take out a license for keeping them. If he keeps them in a particular place section 466 requires the premises to be licensed. A carrier, similarly, is called upon to take out a trade license. He must take out a license for his animals if he keeps them, and the premises where he keeps them must also be licensed under section 466. It is not disputed that the accused employ wagons and horses for his business. There is no evidence against the evidence given by the prosecution. We think that this case comes under the provisions of section 466. But, as this is a test case and inasmuch as the Municipality itself told them at one time that they did not require a license under section 466, we think a nominal fine of Re. 1 (one rupee) only ought to be imposed, and we order accordingly.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476, order under—Application for revision, by whom to be made.

An application under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code to interfere in revision with an order passed under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, can only be made by a party aggrieved thereby, that is to say, the person whose prosecution has been ordered.

Revision against the order of the Junior Munsif, Nagpur, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 36 of 1920, dated the 22nd April 1920.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, who was plaintiff in a civil suit in the Court of the Munsif of Nagpur and won his case, applied to the Court to take action under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code for the prosecution of one of the witnesses for the defence whose deposition had been held to be untrue. The learned Munsif refused to take such action on the ground that, in his opinion, it was not only not reasonably probable but it was highly improbable that a prosecution would result in a conviction. The applicant has now come to this Court with a prayer for revision of this order on the ground that there is a reasonable probability of a conviction and the refusal of the lower Court to take action was not justified.

Even if it were possible to arrive at any other conclusion in regard to the probability of a conviction than that stated by the learned Munsif, and assuming that this Court has the same power of revision in respect of a refusal to act under section 476 as it has in respect of an order instituting a prosecution under that section, the principles laid down by Strachey, C. J., in Alamdar Husain, In the matter of the petition of (1) in the passage quoted in the judgment of this Court in Abdul Husen v. Emperor (2) must govern the case. Before the order can be revised it must be clear that the opinion formed by the learned Munsif in regard to the propriety of a prosecution was not a real opinion but that "the Court acted on merely fanciful grounds, on grounds so empty so obviously wrong that it could not be said to have formed a serious judicial opinion at all." I have examined the case and have not only come to the conclusion that the opinion of the learned Munsif is a perfectly reasonable and possible judicial opinion but am prepared to go much further, if it were necessary, and to say that it is the only possible opinion that could be formed.

It appears to me, further, that application to this Court to interfere in revision with an order passed under section 476 can only be made by a party aggrieved thereby, and that nobody but a person whose prosecution has been ordered can be considered an aggrieved party. The section contemplates action by the Court of its own motion and, though a party is allowed to suggest such action or bring to the Court's notice facts suggesting such action which it might have overlooked, that party has no locus standi in the matter simply because its suggestion first put the Court in motion. It will be admitted that if the learned Munsif had examined the propriety of prosecuting the witness in this case of his own motion, and without any application from the plaintiff, the latter could not apply for revision of his order. If he could, then any outsider, or, at the least, any other party or witness in the case would be equally entitled to do so. How then can the mere fact that he suggested the enquiry give him the right so to apply?

It follows from this that an application for revision of an order refusing to take action under section 476 is impossible, but this also follows from the fact that the applicant to a Court to take action under that section has another remedy. He can apply to the Court for sanction to conduct the prosecution he desires himself, and he can appeal against a refusal. The application for revision is rejected.

Application rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1893), s. 437—Discharge, order of—Further enquiry—Notice to accused, whether necessary.

Where an accused person has once been brought before a Court of justice under process, and is discharged by order of the Court, such order of discharge ought not to be interfered with except after notice to show cause issued to the accused.

Where, therefore, after an accused person had been discharged by order of a Court, the District Magistrate, without notice to the accused, directed further inquiry:

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Etawah, dated the 18th May 1920.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Applicant.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the District Magistrate of Etawah has ordered further enquiry to be made into a complaint against one Hira Lal who had been discharged, after having been brought before the Court on a warrant, that Court being one of competent jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence. The District Magistrate's order appears, on the face of it, to show fairly strong cause against the procedure followed in the trial Court; but it has to be remembered that it was an ex parte order, the District Magistrate having taken it upon himself to dispose of the matter without issuing notice to the accused person. I have always consistently maintained that, where an accused person has once been brought before a Court of Justice under process, whether by means of a summons or by arrest under a warrant, if he is discharged by the Court, that order of discharge should not be interfered with except after notice to show cause issued to the said accused. I believe this is in accordance with what may be called the settled practice of this Court. I think that the regular practice of this Court must be upheld in this matter; but I have, upon suitable occasions, dealt with applications of this sort on the basis that the accused person challenging an order of further enquiry, solely on the ground that it has been made without notice to him, may reasonably be required in this Court, on his application coming up for hearing, to show cause why further enquiry should not be ordered. After this has been done, the order of the Magistrate can either be affirmed or set aside on the merits, without any technical question of law arising. I have asked the applicant to argue his case upon this basis also. The complaint was one of offences punishable under section 406 or under section 417, Indian Penal Code. On the facts alleged by the complainant, it is not quite easy to see why the provisions of section 420 of the same Code were not invoked. In any case, a question of territorial jurisdiction was raised, and it was seriously open to argument whether, on the facts stated by the complainant, the alleged offence or offences could lawfully be taken cognizance of by a Court exercising jurisdiction in the Etawah District. The conclusion I have come to, after hearing the parties is, that the alleged offence punishable under section 406, Indian Penal Code, was one over which the Courts in Etawah could have exercised no jurisdiction. The ordinary place of enquiry or trial for that offence would be within the limits of the Lucknow District and, on the record as it stands at present, no facts are disclosed which would render this offence cognizable by the Etawah Courts, either under section 179, or under section 181 (2), of the Code of Criminal Procedure. As regards the offence of cheating, the complainant's allegation was that he was deceived within the jurisdiction of the Etawah Court, but induced to deliver property and otherwise caused to suffer loss within the territorial jurisdiction of the Lucknow Courts. This offence would, therefore, be covered by the provisions of section 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in view more particularly of the manner in which the principle of that section is explained by illustration (c). The net result is that, whereas a Court exercising jurisdiction in the Lucknow District could lawfully take cognizance of the entire complaint, the Court in Etawah before which the complaint was laid could only take cognizance of a part of the said complaint. In view of this consideration and of others which have occurred to me, but which I prefer not to enter into as they might involve expressing up inadequate materials a provisional opinion as to the merits of the complaint, I am not prepared to say that the order directing further enquiry ought to be affirmed, in spite of the irregular manner in which it was passed. I allow this application and set aside the order of the District Magistrate.

Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 145—Application for re-hearing on ground of non-service of notice—Procedure—Magistrate, duty of—Affidavit of service, whether necessary.

Although in a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure it is not necessary in all cases that there should be an affidavit of service of notice, the Magistrate should, nevertheless, satisfy himself whether service has in fact been effected or not, and ought not to reject an application for re-opening a case on the ground that no notice was served without satisfying himself as to the truth of the allegations contained in the application.

JUDGMENT.

GREAVES, J.—The present application before us is made at the instance of the first party to these proceedings and the sole question at issue is, whether they had been served with the notice. Notice was given to them to appear on the 28th January of this year and they failed to appear on that date, and an order was made adjudging possession to be with the second party. Now, it seems to us unlikely that if, in fact, the first party had been served with notice to appear on the 28th January, they would not have, in fact, appeared on that date. It appears that there is a return made by the peon, who is said to have served the notice on the first party, that it was in fact duly served upon them; but there is no affidavit proving the service; although I am not prepared to say that in all cases an affidavit is necessary, it seems to me that the real test is whether the Magistrate is satisfied that the service has in fact been effected or not; and if the Magistrate in this case had, when the application for re-hearing was made to him, gone into this matter and come to the conclusion that notice had, in fact, been given to the first party, I should not have been inclined to interfere; but, apparently, it appears that the application for a re-opening of the case was rejected without the Magistrate satisying himself whether the allegation of the first party as to its having been served or not was proved.

In these circumstances, we make the Rule absolute, and direct that the matter be re-heard.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

At a trial for offences under sections 302, 120B and 380 of the Penal Code, the Judge admitted evidence of a theft committed some two years subsequently in somewhat similar circumstances, as showing identity, design and motive, and illegal association, and that a system had been pursued by the accused. Objection was taken to the admission of this evidence and the question was reserved for consideration upon a reference under clauses 25 and 26 of the Letters Patent. On the question being referred,—

(2) that it was not open to the Court hearing the reference to direct a new trial, but after rejecting the evidence improperly admitted, the Court should dispose of the case finally. [p. 931, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—Panchu Das and Goberdhone Singh were convicted by the majority of the jury, 7 to 2, at a trial at the Criminal Sessions presided over by Chaudhuri, J., of offences under sections 302, 120B and 380, Indian Penal Code.

The indictment contained 7 counts and included charges of murdering one Dakho Bewa, a woman of the town, on the 10th December 1914, conspiring to rob her, theft of property from her house and abetment of the offences of murder and theft.

The learned Judge admitted certain evidence which was objected to by learned Counsel representing the accused persons but intimated that, as the questions were not covered by any direct Indian authority, he would, if necessary, reserve them for the consideration of the Court. This reference accordingly was made by the learned Judge. The case for the prosecution is set out by the learned Judge in the reference and need not be repeated in detail by me

An important feature of the prosecution case was, that the first accused introduced himself to the deceased woman as a Raja's son or a Zemindar's son and, a few days after, the first accused began visiting the deceased woman; the second accused began coming with him and was introduced as his Durwan. The allegation was that, on the night of 9th December or morning of 10th December 1914, the two accused murdered the deceased woman, or that one of them murdered her and the other abetted the murder, and that they robbed her of practically all she possessed and decamped. Enquiries were made by the Police, but without getting any trace of the alleged murderers and the enquiries were dropped in July 1915. The second accused was arrested in December 1918 in connection with a complaint of theft made by a woman of the town, Shamasundari, against two persons described as a Babu and a Durwan. In the course of enquiries, the Police came across another woman, Niroda, who made a similar complaint against two persons, a Babu and a Durwan.

The Police, on further enquiries being made, came across a third woman, Sindhubala, who made a similar complaint of theft against two persons.

The Inspector of Police obtained a photograph from Sindhubala of one of the persons whom she charged; he showed it to Niroda and Shamasundari both of whom identified it as that of the Babu against whom they complained.

In the course of his enquiries, the Inspector of Police got certain information from a Head Constable who had something to do with the enquiry into the murder of Dakho.

He obtained the addresses of Manoda and Annoda, who are two of the women who lived on the ground floor of Dakho, the murdered woman's house, and on the 9th January 1919 he showed them the photograph. They identified it as that of the Babu who used to visit Dakho in December 1914 and who was with her on the night of the murder,

EMPEROR v. PANCHU DAS.

On the 11th March 1919 the first accused was arrested.

The murder was on the 10th December 1914. Sindhubala's charge related to events of September 1916. Niroda's was February or March 1918 and Shamasundari's October/ November 1918.

It was mainly in relation to part of the evidence of the three women, Sindhubala, Niroda and Shamasundari, and part of the evidence of Inspector M. N. Mukerjee that this reference, was made.

The grounds on which the evidence was said to be admissible are contained in the reference, and are set out at pages 278 and 279 of the paper-book as follows:—

(1) How the two accused were discovered.

(2) That they had "hunted in couples" and, in several instances, taken part in thefts from rich prostitutes, a series of incidents from 1914 to 1918 that they had lived together and had transactions together that a system had been followed by them that they used to go about together under different names and they had associated together with an evil motive, namely that of committing theft from rich prostitutes.

The learned Standing Counsel submitted that his case was that the two accused had conspired to rob Dakho, that the motive for their coming to her house was commitment of theft and, he submitted, it was open to him to prove their identity and subsequent complaints of thefts made by other prostitutes.

He submitted that, although evidence tending to show that the accused had been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment was not admissible, it was admissible upon the issue whether the acts charged against the accused were designed or accidental and to rebut any other defence otherwise open to them, namely, amongst other things, that they did not know each other, but had met in the woman's house by accident. He submitted that he was entitled to give evidence to rebut the defence of innocent association.

The nature of the evidence may be taken from that of Shamasundari, which is referred to in the reference, viz., that accused No. 1 introduced himself as a Babu and accused No. 2 was brought in by him as his Durwan, that she was in the keeping of accused No. 1. That one day they disappeared and the woman discovered money and ornaments missing.

The learned Judge admitted the evidence as showing identity, design and motive and illegal association, and that a system had been pursued by them.

It was first argued that the evidence of the three above-named women was admissible under section 15 of the Evidence Act. In my judgment, this argument should not be acceded to. In this case there was no question of the act being accidental or intentional.

The woman was undoubtedly murdered in a brutal way: her head was practically severed from her body: the deceased woman's room had been rifled and, practically, everything she possessed both in her room or on her person had been stolen. There was no room for any doubt that the acts with which the accused were charged were intentional. The only real question was, who was the person or who were the persons who committed the crime.

Next, it was urged that section 14 of the Evidence Act applied. In my judgment, this section does not apply. There was nothing in the evidence of the three women to shew the state of mind of the accused towards Dakho, or with reference to the particular matter in question. The learned standing Counsel for the Crown then referred to sections 9 and 11 (2) of the Evidence Act and argued that the evidence of the three above-mentioned women was admissible to prove the identity of the two persons who were in Dakho's house on the first floor on the night of the murder.

In this connection, in my judgment, the dates are material. As already mentioned the murder was in December 1914. The first incident, in respect of which the evidence which was objected to related, was in September 1916, viz., Sindhubala's charge, nearly two years after the murder, and the other two women's evidence related to 1918.

In this case the main charge was one of murder: it was admitted by the learned Standing Counsel that the evidence of the three above-mentioned women, which was objected to, could not be material to that charge as the evidence of the three women related to charges of theft only but it was contended that it was admissible to show that the persons who robbed the three above-mentioned women, were the persons who committed the theft on the 10th December 1914.

It was alleged that in each case the offenders passed themselves off as a Babu and a Durwan, and that in each case the complainant was a woman of the town who was visited by the allged Babu and that, consequently, it was highly probable that these two men were the same as those who were living in Dakho's house at the time of the murder. Having regard, however, to the dates of the incidents alleged by the three above-mentioned women, and the nature of their evidence, in my judgment, it was not admissible under section 9 or under section 11 of the Indian Evidence Act.

There was other evidence to which objection was taken, but, in view of the opinion which I hold as to the evidence already dealt with, it is not necessary for me to consider the other evidence.

During the course of the argument we intimated to the learned Counsel that we had come to the conclusion that some of the evidence was improperly admitted; and the question then arose as to whether this Court could order a new trial, which in this case would have been the most desirable course. The learned Standing Counsel, however, submitted that we had no power to direct a new trial, in which submission the learned Counsel for the convicted men concurred.

In view of the decision of this Court in Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (1) and Fateh Chand v. Emperor (2), I am bound to hold that, on this reference, it is not open to us to direct a new trial. The merits of the case were then argued and the learned Standing Counsel submitted that we should uphold the conviction in view of the evidence as to which there was no question, and excluding the evidence to which objection was taken.

In my judgment, the convictions should not be upheld. The accused persons were entitled to be tried by a jury. They were in fact tried by a jury: the jury were not unanimous, the nature of the evidence, which I have referred to and which I consider was wrongly admitted, is such that, in my judgment, it is impossible to say that the verdict of the majority of the jury may not have been affected by it.

There is evidence to which no objection has been raised, as to the identity of the accused persons as being the two men who were in the deceased woman's house on the night of the murder, as, for instance, the evidence of Annoda, Manoda, Keora and P. C. Pal. Criticisms have been made on the evidence of the witnesses by the learned Counsel for the accused, as, for instance, that the method of obtaining the identification of the photograph by the women Annoda and Manoda was not satisfactory. The evidence of P. C. Pal who was described by the learned Standing Counsel as the best witness as to the identity of the first accused has been criticised as being unreliable, it was not suggested that P. C. Pal was not speaking the truth to the best of his recollection, but it was pointed out that he saw the first accused on two occasions only. Some four years before, he gave evidence that he did not recognize the photograph, when it was shown to him, as that of the first accused and when the first accused was brought in a gharry to P. C. Pal's house, even then he did not at first recognize him.

I have considered the evidence of the witnesses to which no objection has been raised. I have not seen these witnesses, but only the written record of their evidence: the jury did see the witnesses and their demeanour in the witness-box. The majority may have believed these witnesses and may not have been influenced by the evidence of the witnesses which was, in my judgment, improperly admitted.

But, on the other hand, in this case the charges of murder and theft were tried together and the evidence which, in my judgment, was improperly admitted, was of such a nature that it is possible that it may have had considerable influence upon the minds of the majority of the jury who were in favour of a conviction. In this case, in my judgment, it is not possible to say with reasonable certainty that the majority of the jury would have accepted and acted upon the evidence as to identity, to which no objection was taken, if the evidence which, in my judgment, was improperly admitted, had not also been presented to them. In my judgment, therefore, the convictions of Panchu Das and Goberdhone Singh should be set aside.

In this case, in view of the admission of the learned Standing Counsel that the evidence, which was objected to, was not admissible on the charge of murder, it would have been desirable to try the charge of murder separately.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The facts necessary for the determination of the questions which arise on this reference, under clause 25 of the Letters Patent, lie in a narrow compass and may be briefly recited. On the night of the 10th December 1914 Dakho Bawa, a woman of the town, who lived at 29, Premchand Boral Street, in this city, was murdered. There was an inquest before the Coroner, when the jurors held that her death had been caused by decapitation by some person unknown under such circumstances that the act amounted to murder. The Police held an enquiry which proved fruitless and was dropped as the culprits could not be traced. On the 29th December 1918 the second accused was arrested in the course of an enquiry by the Police in another matter and the first accused was similarly arrested on the 11th March 1919. Acting on information received, and on statements alleged to have been made by the first accused, the Police discovered in the possession of the accused a shawl and ornaments said to have belonged to the murdered woman. The case was heard by the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the accused were committed to take their trial before this Court in connection with the murder of the deceased woman. They were tried before Mr. Justice Chaudhuri and a special jury on the following charges:—namely, (1) that the accused had committed an offence under section 120B, Indian Penal Code, as they had conspired to rob the woman; (2) that the accused had committed an offence under section 302, Indian Penal Code, as they had murdered the woman; (3) that the first accused had committed the murder and the second accused had abetted the offence; (4) that the second accused had committed the murder and the first accused had abetted the offence; (5) that the two accused had committed theft in a building used as a human dwelling; (6) that the first accused had committed theft and the second accused had abetted the offence, and (7) that the second accused had committed theft and the first accused had abetted the offence. The jury, by a majority of seven against two, found both the accused guilty of murder, conspiracy and theft; their verdict was not taken in respect of the charges of abetment. Mr. Justice Chaudhuri thereupon sentenced each accused to transportation for life under section 302 and to rigorous imprisonment for five years under each of the other sections, the sentences to run concurrently. But, as objection had been taken to the admissibility of certain evidence, the learned Judge reserved the point under clause 25 of the Letters Patent. For the appreciation of the precise question of admissibility of the evidence, it is essential to state the facts in fuller detail.

The case for the prosecution is that, in November or December 1914, the first accused became the paramour of the woman and introduced himself as the son of a Raja or Zemindar. After a few days, the second accused began to come with the first accused and was introduced as his Durwan. The house where the woman lived was two storied; she used to occupy the rooms on the first floor; the ground floor rooms had been let out to other women of the town. The two accused used to come to the house at 10 30 or 11 at night and lived upstairs. The first accused slept in the same room with the woman, while the second used to occupy an adjoining room. No other persons lived in the upper floor. After the first accused began to visit her, she tried to turn out the tenants, one of whom actually left; she also issued an order that the outer door of the house must be locked from inside at midnight. On the 9th December 1914, the two accused came as usual in the evening at about 10 30 or 11, and the outer door was thereafter locked up from inside by the second accused at midnight. Next morning, the outer door was found open but the room of the deceased woman was padlocked. This was unusual; but the other women in the house thought that Dakho might have gone to see the landlord. A search was made for her in the house of the landlord and also in the bathing platforms on the river bank; but as no trace could be found, the Police was eventually informed by the paramour of one of the other women in the house. The Police came in the afternoon, forced open the door of her room, found the woman dead, her body covered with a blanket and her head practically completely severed from the body. All her boxes were open and the ornaments and clothes were gone except a pair of ear-rings in her ears. At the trial before this Court, evidence was adduced to prove these allegations; but, on behalf of the Crown, leave was obtained to give evidence also on the following points, namely, (1) the circumstances which led to the discovery and arrest of the two accused; and (2) facts to establish that the two accused had, as it was put, "hunted in couples," and in several instances taken part in thefts from rich prostitutes, that is, a series of incidents from 1914 to 1918 were proved to establish that they had lived together and had transactions together; that a system had been followed by them; that they used to go about together under different names and had associated together with an evil motive, namely, the commission of thefts from rich prostitutes. On behalf of the accused, objection was taken that such evidence was not admissible under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. The objection was overruled, and, besides evidence of association, evidence was permitted to be given to show that the two accused went together to the houses of prostitutes, the first introducing himself as a Babu and taking the second with him as his Durwan; that they subsequently disappeared and this was followed by the discovery of loss of money and ornaments by the women concerned. The substantial point for determination is, whether evidence of this description was admissible to prove the guilt of the accused.

At the commencement of the hearing before us, a question of procedure was raised. We ruled that the Counsel for the prisoner should begin. This is in accordance with the decision in R. v. Gate Fulford (3) where the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved ruled, that Counsel for the prisoner begins (and has a reply) "that being the invariable practice of the Court."

(8) (1856) Dears & B. 74; 7 Cox C. C. 230.

It is necessary to premise that the question of admissibility of the evidence must be determined with reference to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. This is manifest from the preamble and from the provisions of sections 2 and 3. In the case of Rani Lekraj Kuer v. Baboo Mahpal Singh (4) the Judicial Committee observed as follows:—

"The Indian Evidence Act has repealed all rules of evidence not contained in any Statute or Regulation and the plaintiff must, therefore, show that these papers are admissible under some provision of the Indian Evidence Act."

Equally explicit is the observation of Jackson, J., in the case of Empress v. Ashootosh Chuckerbutty (5) which was heard by a Full Bench:—

"In considering such questions as these, it appears to me that embarrassment and difficulty will be greatly lessened, if, instead of assuming the English law of evidence, and then enquiring what changes the Evidence Act has made in it, we regard, as I think we are bound to do, the Act itself as containing the scheme of the law, the principles, and the application of these principles to the cases of most frequent occurrence."

The view that the Indian Evidence Act does in effect prohibit the employment of any kind of evidence not specifically authorized by the Act itself has been emphasized in other cases: Queen-Empress v. Abdullah (6), Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (7), Collector of Gorakhpur v. Palakdhari Singh (8), Imperatrise v. Pitamber Jina (9). We must, consequently, examine, under which provision, if any, the evidence was admissible.

Reliance has been placed by the Crown on section 15 which is in these terms,—

"When there is a question, whether an act was accidental or intentional or done with a particular knowledge or intention, the fact that such act formed part of a series of similar occurrences, in each of which the person doing the act was concerned, is relevant."

This is clearly of no avail. There was no room for any hypothesis that the death of the woman, whoever might have caused it, was either accidental or unintentional. The medical evidence makes it incontestable that the act amounted to deliberate murder. No question could, consequently, arise whether the act was accidental or intentional or was done with a particular knowlegde or intention. In so far as the charge of theft was concerned, there was also no question, whether the act was accidental or intentional or was done with a particular knowledge or intention. Further, we cannot overlook that no murder was committed in the three subsequent instances which the three women of the town Shamasundari, Niroda and Sindhubala came forward to narrate. Consequently, the act of murder could not by any stretch of language be deemed to form part of a series of similar occurrences. Mr. Das fully appreciated this difficulty and sought to utilise section 15 only in respect of the charge of theft, although he ventured to express the hope that, if the evidence was admitted under section 15 for this limited purpose, the jury would be so influenced thereby, that they would in view of the other circumstances of the case, bring forward a verdict of guilty as well on the charge of murder as on the charge of theft.

The Standing Counsel, in other words, wished to achieve by indirect means what he could not possibly attain directly even upon the most favourable interpretation of section 15. This clearly should not be permissible and indicates that, in the present case, separate trial of the charges of murder and theft was desirable as has been pointed out by the learned Chief Justice at the conclusion of his judgment. There are, however, other difficulties equally insuperable in his way. Section 15 is of no assistance unless it is established that the act forms part of a series of similar occurrences. It is well established that the gist of the section is that, unless there is a sufficient and reasonable connection between the fact to be proved and the evidentiary fact, that is, unless, there is in substance some common link they cannot form a series. There was also the undeniable fact that each of the occurrences had its own special features so that they could not properly be deemed similar occurrences.

Reliance was next placed on behalf of the Crown upon section 14, which is in these terms,—

"Facts showing the existence of any state of mind, such as intention, knowledge, good faith, negligence, rashness, ill-will or good-will towards any particular person, or showing the existence of any state of body or bodily feeling, are relevant, when the existence of any such state of mind or body or bodily feeling is in issue or relevant.

"Explanation 1.—A fact relevant as showing the existence of a relevant state of mind must show that the state of mind exists, not generally, but in reference to the particular matter in question.

"Explanation 2.—But where, upon the trial of a person accused of an offence, the previous commission by the accused of an offence is relevant within the meaning of this section, the previous conviction of such person shall also be a relevant fact."

It is plain that this section is of no assistance. The existence of a state of mind such as intention, knowledge, good faith, negligence, rashness, ill-will or good-will towards a person, or the existence of a state of body or bodily feeling was not and could not be in issue in the circumstances of the case. The defence was a complete denial and no question of the character contemplated by section 14 did or could possibly arise. The first explanation to the section creates a further difficulty, because the relevant fact proved to show the existence of a relevant state of mind must show that the state of mind exists not generally but in reference to the particular matter in question. The evidence introduced was plainly not of this description. The illustrations (i), (j), (o) and (p) clearly show that the evidence could not be admitted. Reference may particularly be made to the last two illustrations,—"A is tried for the murder of B by intentionally shooting him dead. The fact that A, on other occasions, shot at B is relevant, as showing his intention to shoot B but the fact that A was in the habit of shooting at people with intent to murder them is irrelevant."

"A is tried for a crime; the fact that he said something indicating an intention to commit that particular crime is relevant, but the fact that he said something indicating a general disposition to commit crimes of that class is irrelevant."

These illustrate the elementary principle that evidence of general disposition, habit and tendencies is not relevant.

From the statement of the case by Mr. Justice Chaudhuri it appears that sections 14 and 15 were the only sections which had been referred to, and I have, consequently, considered up till now, the question of their true construction. Upon a plain reading of these sections, I feel no doubt that they do not make the evidence admissible. This conclusion is supported by the decisions in Empress v. Moodeliar (10), Baharuddin Mandal v. Emperor (11) and Emperor v. Abdul Wahid Khan (12). In the first of these cases Sir Richard Garth, C. J., pointed out that section 14 applies to that class of cases where a particular act is more or less criminal or culpable according to the state of mind or feeling of the person who does it, and added that the Court must be very careful not to extend the operation of the section to other cases where the question of guilt or innocence depends upon actual facts and not upon the state of a man's mind or feeling. Mr. Justice Mitter, if I have read his judgment correctly, did not really dissent from this view. The same line of reasoning was adopted in the second case, where it was ruled that proof cannot be offered of an independent offence to show that by reason of such independent offence the accused is more likely to have committed the one for which he is on trial; in other words, evidence of such collateral offence cannot be received as substantive evidence of the offence on trial, though, under section 14, evidence may be given of intention and like matters where the factum of such intention or like matters is relevant. The distinction between cases where intention is, and cases where intention is not, relevant is illustrated by the decisions in Emperor v. Debendra Pershad (13) and Emperor v. Abdul Wahid Khan (12) which lie on opposite sides of the dividing line. Reference may also be made to the decision of West, J., in R. v. Parbhudas (14) where he emphasized the inadmissibility of evidence of one crime (not reduced to legal certainty by a conviction) to prove the existence of another unconnected, even though cognate, crime. On behalf of the Crown reliance was, however, placed upon the decisions in Makin v. Attorney General for New South Wales (15) R. v. Ball (16), reversing R. v. Ball (17), R. v. Smith (18), R. v. Bond (19) and R. v. Thompson (20) which has been affirmed by the House of Lords in Thompson v. R. (21). No useful purpose would be served by a detailed analysis of these decisions; most of them, along with other cases, were reviewed by this Court in Amritalal Hazra v. Emperor (22) where the principles deducible therefrom as to the law administered in England were formulated in the following terms :—

"Facts similiar to but not part of the same transaction as the main fact, are not in general admissible to prove either the occurrence of the main fact or the identity of its author. But evidence of similar facts, although in general inadmissible to prove the main fact or the connection of the parties therewith, is receivable, after evidence, aliunde on these points has been given, to show the state of mind of the parties with regard to such fact; in other words, evidence of similar facts may be received to prove a party's knowledge of the nature of the main fact or transaction, or his intent with respect thereto. In general, whenever it is necessary to rebut even by anticipation the defence of accident, mistake or other innocent condition of mind, evidence that the defendant has been concerned in a systematic course of conduct of the same specific kind as that in question may be given. To admit evidence under this head, however, the other acts tendered must be of the same specific kind as that in question and not of a different character and the acts tendered must also have been proximate in point of time to that in question."

I have re examined these cases and I see no reason to doubt the accuracy of the above statement, which fully accords with the decisions of the Court of Criminal Appeal in the cases of R. v. Rodley (23) and R. v. Ellis (24) as also other recent cases, such as Thompson v. R. (21), R v. Fisher (25), R. v. Mason (26), R. v. Baird (27), Perkins v. Jeffery (28). It is plain that the principles so enunciated are of no assistance to the prosecution. On the other hand, there is an important passage in the judgment of Kennedy, J., in the case of R. v. Bond (19) to which the attention of the Standing Counsel was drawn by the learned Chief Justice in the course of the argument, as destructive of his contention :—

"The admissibility, not merely the weight, of the evidence depends upon the evidence of such conduct as would authorize a reasonable inference of a systematic pursuit of the same criminal object."

There is thus no escape from the position that neither section 14 nor section 15 of the Indian Evidence Act is of any assistance to the prosecution.

The Standing Counsel was finally constrained to invoke the aid of sections 9 and 11. Reliance was placed upon the rule prescribed by section 9 that facts which establish the identity of any thing or person whose identity is relevant, are relevant in so far as they are necessary for that purpose. This does not advance the argument for the prosecution. No question of identity arises till the offenders who committed the crime under investigation are ascertained by independent evidence. Section 11 is equally unavailing. That section provides that facts not otherwise relevant are relevant if by themselves or in connection with other facts they make the existence or non-existence of any fact in issue or relevant fact highly probable or improbable. As was pointed out by West, J., in R. v. Parbhudas (14), the section is no doubt expressed in terms so extensive that any fact which can by a chain of ratiocination be brought into connection with another so as to have a bearing upon a point in issue, may possibly be held to be relevant within its meaning. But the connections of human affairs are so infinitely various and so far reaching that thus to take the section in its widest admissible sense would be to complicate every trial with a mass of collateral enquiries, limited only by the patience and the means of the parties. That such an extensive meaning was not intended is possibly indicated by the fact that the illustrations do not go beyond cases familiar in the English Law of Evidence; Queen-Empress v. Parjiram (29). A restriction is further obviously imported by the use of the expression highly probable or improbable. In the case before us, what is the substance of the matter? A and B are charged with theft committed in 1914 in the house of a prostitute; evidence is brought forward to show that C and D committed a theft in the house of another prostitute in 1918 in somewhat similar circumstances. I am not prepared to hold that the latter evidence is admissible either under section 9 or under section 11 to prove that A and B are the same persons as C and D. I hold, accordingly, that sections 9 and 11 are of no greater assistance to the prosecution than sections 14 and 15.

The question next arises, what are the functions of this Court in such circumstances? The answer depends upon the true constructions of clauses 25 and 26 of the Letters Patent. The matter was reviewed in my judgment in the case of Fateh Chand v. Emperor (2). I then came to the conclusion that the obvious intention of the clauses, to be gathered from their plain language, was that the case reserved or certified should be finally decided on review and not remitted for re-trial. This was in accord with the view taken in a long line of cases in this Court and elsewhere; R. v. Navroji (30), Imperatrix v. Pitamber Jina (9), Emperor v. Narayan Raghunath (31), Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (1), Queen-Empress v. O'Hara (32). Upon a fresh consideration of the subject, I see no reason to resile from the opinion previously expressed by me. This view, it may be added, also accords with the accepted interpretation of section 2 of the Crown Cases Act, 1848, which furnished the model for the provisions of clauses 25 and 26 of our Letters Patent [R. v. Saunders (33), R. v. Gibson (34)]; though I am not unmindful that in R. v. Mellor (35) and R. v. Yeadon (36), the Court for Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved, granted a venire de novo under very exceptional circumstances which vitiated the trial as conducted in a manner unknown to law. [See, however, the decisions of the Judicial Committee in R. v. Bertrand (37) and R. v. Murphy (38) which dissented from R. v. Scaife (39)]. But, apart from this analogy, I hold, on the plain language of clauses 25 and 26 of the Letters Patent, that the intention was that the case should be finally decided on review and not remitted for re-trial.

This leads me on to the next point, namely, can the Court on review, examine the evidence and determine whether, after exclusion of the inadmissible evidence, the residue is sufficient to justify the conviction? The Standing Counsel has argued that the Court is not merely competent, but is really bound to follow this procedure. On behalf of the accused it has not been disputed that this contention accords with the numerous decisions previously mentioned, but we have been pressed to hold that they were overruled by implication by the Judicial Committee in the case of Subrahmania v. King-Emperor (40). Reliance has also been placed upon the observations of the Judicial Committee in Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (15) where they emphatically condemned the transference, from the Jury to the Court, of the determination of the question, whether the evidence, that is, what the law regards as evidence, established the guilt of the accused. The question thus raised is not free from difficulty and was left open in the case of Fateh Chand v. Emperor (2) as the evidence there was manifestly insufficient to support the conviction. In the case before us the question has been re-argued and I have arrived at the conclusion that the Judicial Committee did not, by their decision in Subrahmania v. King Emperor (40), overrule by implication the series of cases in Calcutta and in Bombay where the High Court had, in cases reserved or certified, reviewed the evidence and determined the question of guilt of the accused. The decision of the Judicial Committee must be limited to cases of the type then before them, namely, where the trial had been conducted in a mode entirely prohibited by law, and cannot be extended to cases where evidence had been erroneously received or improperly rejected. If this view were not adopted, the result would follow that, wherever evidence, however trifling its effect, had been erroneously received or excluded the Court would be constrained to quash the conviction and sentence and set free the accused as no re-trial could be ordered. Such a conclusion would directly contravene the principle enunciated in section 167 of the Indian Evidence Act,—

"The improper admission or rejection of evidence shall not be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case if it shall appear to the Court before which such objection is raised that, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision or that, if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision."

This provision, by the very generality of its terms, applies as much to Criminal as to Civil cases [Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (1), Empress v. McGuire (41), R. v. Navroji (30), Queen-Empress v. O'Hara (32), Imperatrix v. Pitamber Jina (9)]. We must, consequently, hold that it is incumbent on this Court to investigate whether, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the verdict of the jury.

When we examine the evidence, we must, as the learned Chief Justice has pointed out, consider whether we may, with reasonable certainty, hold that, even if the evidence improperly admitted had been excluded, the jury, upon the residue of the evidence, would have brought in a verdict of guilty. If this stand-point were not adopted the result would be that in every case where evidence had been wrongly admitted and the question was on that ground brought up for review, the accused would be practically deprived of the benefit of what is called by Lord Hersehell, L. C., "the much cherished right of trial by Jury in Criminal cases" [Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (15)]. The Judges would in truth be substituted for the jury, the verdict would become theirs and theirs alone and would be arrived at upon a perusal of the evidence without any opportunity of seeing the demeanour of the witnesses and weighing the evidence with the assistance afforded thereby. This aspect of the matter was emphasized by Sir John Coleridge in R. v. Bertrand (37) in impressive language which may be usefully re-called,—

"The most careful note must often fail to convey the evidence fully in some of its most important elements, those for which the open oral examination of the witness in presence of prisoner, Judge and Jury is so justly prized. It cannot give the look or manner of the witness, his hesitation, his doubts, his variations of language, his confidence or precipitancy, his calmness or consideration; it cannot give the manner of the prisoner when that has been important upon the statement of anything of particular moment;...it is, in short, or it may be, the dead body of the evidence, without its spirit, which is supplied, when given openly and orally, by the ear and eye of those who receive it."

A grave responsibility, consequently, rests upon the Court when it is called upon to review the case on the evidence under clause 26 of the Letters Patent read with section 167 of the Indian Evidence Act The evidence improperly admitted might have chiefly influenced the jury to return a verdict of guilty, and the rest of the evidence, which might on paper appear to the Court sufficient to support the conviction might have been reasonably disbelieved by them in view of the demeanour of the witnesses or might have been regarded by them isolated from the foreign matter improperly introduced as wholly insufficient to justify an inference of guilt. In such circumstances, the right principle to adopt is to ask ourselves whether we can feel certain that, on the residue of the evidence, a reasonable jury would have brought in a verdict of guilty; and this is precisely the test formulated by Isaacs, L. C. J., in the case of R. v. Barron (42). In that case evidence of a previous accusation of an offence similar to that charged had been improperly given. In an appeal against the conviction it was held that the evidence was prejudicial to the accused and should not have been admitted. The Lord Chief Justice then added that, as "we cannot be certain that the jury would have found him guilty, if it had not been admitted" the conviction must be quashed. To the same effect are the following observations of Lord Alverstone, C. J., in the case of R. v. James Campbell (43) where the appeal was allowed and the conviction quashed on the ground that substantial evidence against the defendant had been improperly admitted:—

"It is not possible to say that this evidence may not have had a serious effect, it is true there was weighty evidence besides this, but we cannot say that the jury would have returned the same verdict on that evidence alone."

The same test has been adopted and applied in other cases; R. v. Rodley (23), R. v. Stephen Norton (44).

When we examine the evidence in the case before us from this standpoint, what is the position? There is no room for doubt that the evidence improperly admitted was introduced with a view to influence the opinion of the jury, and the character of that evidence justifies the conclusion that, in all human probability, they were influenced thereby. As regards the residue of the evidence it cannot be disputed that there are important contradictions; and this is not strange, as the oral evidence upon the question in controversy, which was one of identification, was adduced more than four years after the alleged incident. The majority of the witnesses who came forward to depose necessarily belonged to a class which does not inspire me with absolute confidence in their testimony, the most respectable amongst them identified the accused neither promptly nor without hesitation; on the other hand, the attempt made by the Police to refresh the memory of some amongst them by photographs and suggestions is by no means reassuring. Finally, we cannot ignore the fact that, even on the whole evidence as adduced at the trial (inclusive of the evidence improperly admitted), the verdict of the jury was not unanimous; the very fact that they disagreed shows that to some minds, at any rate, there seemed to be doubts in the case. The substance of the matter then is that the residue of the evidence is by no means conclusive, if there are some considerations in favour of a conviction there are others no less strong in favour of an acquittal; and I am not prepared to say that the Jury would—not might—have come to the same conclusion as they did upon the entire evidence. In such circumstances, in a case of extreme gravity like this, where men are on trial for their lives, I feel no doubt as to the course to be adopted; in my judgment, the conviction and sentence upon both the accused must be quashed.

FLETCHER, J., agree with Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerji.

CHAUDHURI, J.—The following is a short statement of the facts of the case before us:—

It is said that the two accused lived for some time about the end of 1914 in the house of a rich woman of the town named Dakho. They and Dakho occupied the first floor and she had prostitute tenants in the ground floor. Dakho became the mistress of accused No. 1 who had introduced himself as a wealthy Babu. He brought accused No. 2 there as his Durwan. On the 10th December 1914 the outer door of the house was padlocked by accused No. 2 at about midnight and both of them were in the upper floor that night. Next morning that door was found open with the padlock hanging from a ring attached to it and the woman's room was found padlocked from outside. The other inmates thought she had gone out, but as she did not return, a search was made for her and the Police were eventually informed. The door was burst open and her dead body was discovered, the head practically completely severed from the body, and all her valuables gone. The two men were also missing. No trace of them could be found and the Police dropped the investigation in July 1915.

I now proceed to state the facts which led to their arrest and trial.

On the 14th November 1918 a woman of the town named Shamasundari complained about a theft from her room of property of considerable value (about Rs. 4,000) against two persons, naming them as Narain Babu and Mahabir Pandey, who had introduced themselves as a rich man and a Durwan. Inspector Mahendra Nath Mukerji was placed in charge of the investigation. In course of that enquiry he came across a woman of the town named Niroda who had a similar complaint and gave the name of another woman named Sindhubala who also had a similar complaint against a Babu and a Durwan who used to accompany him. The man she said called himself Probash Kumar Roy alias Birendra Nath Roy. She gave the Police Officer a photograph of the Babu (Exhibit 33). The photograph was shown to Shamasundari and Niroda and they identified it as that of the Babu. This was on the 27th November 1918, Sindhubala mentioned a woman of the name of Kiran who told the officer that she had seen the men living together in a tiled hut at 6, Piarabagan Lane, and took him there on the 23th November 1918. The officer got that house watched up to the 21st December 1918. No one came there. He then searched the house. Some ornaments were found, amongst them, Exhibits 7 and 9 (a silver tora and a silver gote) and some letters and post-cards, amongst them Exhibits 8 and 9. He received some information and went to Khulna. He returned to Calcutta on the 28th December 1918 and, on some information, watched another house, 19, Goabagan Lane, and arrested the second accused there next day. On the 5th of January 1919 he got the names of certain persons from another Police Officer who was connected with the investigation of Dakho's murder. On the 9th of January 1919 he showed them the photograph, Exhibit 33. They identified it as that of the Babu who had lived with Dakho. The investigation continued : on the 11th of March, at about 11 P. M., he was sent for by Niroda who had managed to catch hold of accused No. 1 when he visited another woman of the town. The Inspector arrested him and entered a charge against him at once. The accused made a statement and took the officer to premises 5, Patuatola Lane which was searched and a shawl was found. A search list (Exhibit 3) was prepared and the accused signed it as Panchanan Das. The shawl is item No. 11 in Exhibit 3. Five photographs were also found, item No. 13 in Exhibit 3. One of these was his and the others of himself and Sindhubala taken together. A receipt for a plaint was also found there. After some further investigation the case was sent up for trial. The charges framed against them are under sections 302, 302/114, 120-B, 380/114, Indian Penal Code.

The most important point in this case is that of the identity of the two accused. The prosecution gave evidence how the accused were traced and arrested. Evidence of Shamasundari, Niroda and Sindhubala in connection therewith was given by the prosecution and it was contended on behalf of the Crown that they were entitled to give evidence, that the two accused went to rich prostitutes together, one introducing himself as a Babu and the other as his Durwan, that they assumed different names at different times, and that these prostitutes missed valuables about the same time as they disappeared. That those were a series of acts showing a system which the two used to pursue. As the matter was not covered by authority in this Court I reserved certain points which are fully set out in my note of reference. It also contains a summary of what was argued and refers to the cases cited.

Section 9, Evidence Act, says that facts necessary to explain or introduce a fact in issue or relevant fact, or which support or rebut an inference suggested by a fact in issue or relevant fact or which establish the identity of any person whose identity is relevant or which show the relation of parties by whom any such fact was transacted are relevant, in so far as they are necessary for that purpose.

I hold that it was competent for the prosecution in this case to prove facts showing that the two lived together, had business transactions together, that they used to correspond, that they visited rich prostitutes together, one of them introducing himself as a rich Babu and the other as his Durwan, that they were the same persons although they had given different names. These facts are relevant under section 9 of the Evidence Act for establishing their identity and association. It was open to the defence to say that it was a case of innocent association. The question, therefore, arises "Is evidence to negative such defence permissible?" Section 14 lays down that facts showing the existence of any state of mind such as intention are relevant:—Explanation 1 limits it thus,—A fact relevant as showing the existence of a relevant state of mind must show that the state of mind exists, not generally but in reference to the particular matter in question. Explanation (2), however, extends it, making the previous conviction of a person a relevant fact where upon the trial of such person the previous conviction is relevant within the meaning of section 14.

In this connection section 15, Evidence Act, is important. It lays down that where there is a question whether an act was accidental or intentional or done with a particular knowledge or intention the fact that such act formed part of a series of similar occurrences in each of which the person doing the act was concerned is relevant. It is wrong to say that this section only deals with intention as opposed to accident. The words underlined (italicised) were added by section 2, Act III of 1891, which must not be overlooked in construing section 15. The case for the prosecution is, that the two accused used to introduce themselves to rich prostitutes as a wealthy master and servant. One of them used to remain in the room of the prostitute and the other, the Durwan, kept guard. They lived in their houses for some time to gain their confidence and when they found a favourable opportunity committed theft and disappeared. That is the system they pursued and it is urged that it is competent for the prosecution to prove it in order to show that when they came to Dakho they intended to rob her, and that section 15 allows such evidence to be given, namely, that in other instances they played a similar part in the houses of other rich prostitutes whose valuables disappeared simultaneously with their disappearance, in order to show intent, guilty knowledge, design or system, and that it is open to the prosecution to rebut the defence that they had met accidentally in Dakho's house, or that they had gone there without any dishonest motive, that is to say, to give evidence of similar incidents although subsequent in date in which they were charged with having committed theft. I agree with that contention and hold that the evidence objected to was rightly admitted. The English cases in support of this view are referred to in my note of reference, I do not see any difference in the Indian Law on the the subject. No one saw the accused committing the offences they are charged with. The direct evidence is that they were in the house that night and they disappeared the next morning, when the murder and robbery were discovered but the case mainly depends upon collateral circumstances. I understood that my learned colleagues were prepared to hold that there was no doubt upon the evidence that two men were in the house of the deceased that night and acted in concert and murdered and robbed her. I take it that they hold that those two men whoever they were, conspired to commit theft, committed it and also committed murder, the motive being theft.

No doubt, evidence tending to show that the accused have been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment is not admissible unless upon the issue whether the acts charged against the accused were designed or accidental or unless to rebut a defence otherwise open to them. Makin v. Attorney General for New South Wales (15), R. v. Wyatt (45). In this case, no doubt, the severed head proved it was murder, and the loss of valuables, theft, but there was something more to be proved, namely, that the motive for the murder was theft and that the two persons who were in the house had combined to commit such theft. The murder and robbery were parts of one transaction. It is the general rule of law to admit evidence of motive. It was urged in this case as it was in Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (15) that evidence is admissible of any acts or doings of the person accused if such acts or doings are so connected with the transaction under charge or are of a character so similar thereto as to lead to a reasonable inference that the prisoner committed the act charged, but it is hardly necessary to discuss any general proposition of that character. Section 11, Evidence Act, was invoked in aid by the prosecution but its terms are so general that I am not prepared to use it. In this case I am satisfied that the evidence was properly laid before the Jury and dissent from the opposite view.

Then, the question arises what the Court is to do if the evidence is rejected. Sections 25 and 26 of the Letters Patent deal with the matter. It has been uniformly held in this Court, ever since the case of Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (1), that this Court is alone empowered to deal with the remaining evidence and give its final judgment on it, and not the Court below and that an order for retrial is not competent. Although I share the doubt of Pontifex, J., as to the correctness of the ruling in Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (1), I feel bound by it and subsequent rulings which have been uniformly followed all these years. The Privy Council has not also questioned it in Subrahmania's case (40), where it was cited. I think that it is entirely wrong that the accused should thus be deprived of the verdict of a jury and the function of the jury should by transferred to a Bench of Judges which has to deal with the residue of the recorded evidence.

Section 167, Evidence Act, has been held applicable to such cases. It says that we are to determine if there is sufficient evidence to justify the decision independently of the evidence objected to and admitted. I think there is. In so deciding I am keeping the evidence objected to entirely aside. I told the jury that it would not be improper for them to attach but little value to that part of the case and call attention to the penultimate paragraph of my note of reference.

I believe the evidence of identification, although the photograph of the accused No. 1 was shown to Manoda, Annoda, Prafulla and Giribala by the Investigating officer before they were examined in Court. That they took time in identifying him when the photograph was first shown was natural as the man was dressed up when the photograph was taken. It was shown to them more than three years after they had seen him. Prafulla's doubt, when the accused was first shown to him after his arrest, was also due to lapse of time. He had seen the man only on two occasions; on one of such occasions, however, he was with the accused for sometime. I do not think the shawl has been sufficiently identified. I place much reliance on the evidence of the silversmith as regards the gote which was found in the box of accused No. 2. The other evidence about the identification is not without value. It is clearly established that these two were well-known to each other and that they had given different names to different people and that accused No. 1 is not a Zemindar or a Zemindar's son, but a menial servant. The statements made by Manoda, Annoda, Panchu Keora and others to the Police soon after the occurrence I consider of great value. I have no hesitation in holding that both the accused are guilty of the offence of murder, robbery and conspiracy to rob, as charged. It is not for us to speculate what the jury would have done. It is for us to arrive at a decision and, after all, one's own mind is his best standard.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice in holding that the evidence to which objection was taken was not admissible.

I accept the proposition that this Court has on previous occasion held that it cannot order a re-trial.

On the merits, I am satified that the two accused before us are the men who caused the unfortunate woman's death. The evidence given by the inmates of the house and by the Doctor is of a convincing nature, and my learned brother who presided at the trial believed the witnesses to be speaking the truth. I do not think it necessary to ask what view a jury would take of the evidence, except so far as the opinion of a hypothetical jury affords a standard of reasonableness. If it were necessary to ask such a question I should hold that of nine reasonable men at least two-thirds would believe the evidence, and, having regard to the terms of the charge delivered by my learned brother, I would go further and hold that, as a matter of fact, the seven jurors who found the accused guilty, found them guilty on the evidence to which objection cannot be taken.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 322 OF 1920.

July 14, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Sulaiman and Mr. Justice Ryves.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

JHAMMAN AND OTHERS—ACCUSED.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 304—Fatal blow struck in course of fight—Uncertainty as to who struck blow—Offence.

Where two parties armed with lathis indulge in a fight, and one of the contesting parties receives injuries from the effects of which he dies, but it is uncertain which of the several persons composing the opposite side struck the fatal blow, these persons are guilty of an offence under section 304 of the Penal Code. [p. 943, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from the Sessions statement.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case notice was issued to the accused persons to show cause why their conviction under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code should not be altered to one under section 304 of the same Code and the sentences enhanced. Notices have been duly served but no one appears on their behalf. The case for the prosecution was that one Ekram had purchased a field in village Dandpur adjoining the plots owned by the accused, that on the 21st of October 1919 the accused armed with lathis went to Ekram's plot to upset the crops, that Ekram remonstrated, on which there was a fight in which Ekram and his nephew Ram Chandra were badly beaten, Ekram dying on the spot. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that "the evidence did not show who amongst the accused had such a blunt weapon of broder dimensions. It is also not clear at all as to who gave this deadly blow and, under the circumstances, the conviction can only be under section 325, Indian Penal Code." He placed reliance on Emperor v. Bhola Singh (1).

The medical evidence makes it quite clear that the deceased Ekram received no less than 6 injuries, 5 of which were on the head and one of which smashed his skull to pieces and there can be no doubt that the deceased seems to have been beaten even after he had fallen on the ground. The learned Sessions Judge has, however, found "there appears to be greater reason to believe that Mukanda and Ekram's party went to take forcible possession of one-half of the field than that the accused went to upset the crops." He goes on, however, to remark that it is quite clear to him that both sides went prepared to fight, for men on both sides received injuries. They were armed with lathis and they went to fight in vindication of their rights or supposed rights. In our opinion, on the facts found by the learned Sessions Judge, there can be no doubt that the accused persons were at least guilty of the offence under section 304, Indian Penal Code. The case referred to by the learned Sessions Judge has not been followed in a number of subseqnent cases. We may briefly refer to the following :—Kanhai v. Emperor(2), Hanuman v. Emperor(3), Emperor v. Ram Newas (4) and Emperor v. Gulab (5), (1) 29 A 282; A. W. N. (1907) 51; 4 A. L. J. 207; 5 Cr. L. J. 130.

(2) 21 Ind. Cas. 657; 11 A. L. J. 752; 35 A. 329; 14 Cr. L. J. 609.

(3) 21 Ind. Cas. 1005; 11 A. L. J. 926; 35 A. 560; 14 Cr. L. J. 685.

(4) 21 Ind. Cas. 663; 35 A. 506; 11 A. L. J. 804; 14 Cr. L. J. 615.

(5) 47 Ind. Cas. 805; 40 A. 686; 16 A. L. J. 731; 19 Cr. L. J. 953.

It appears, however, that both the accused persons are very young. Jhamman is 20 years and Dhal Singh is 17 years. In view of their youth and the fact that it was Mukanda and Ekram's party that went to take forcible possession of one-half of the field, we are of opinion that the sentence of 5 years' rigorous imprisonment on each would, under the circumstances, meet the ends of justice. We accordingly alter the conviction from one under section 325, Indian Penal Code, to one under section 304, Indian Penal Code and enhance the sentence to 5 years rigorous imprisonment in each case. The sentence under the rioting section will stand and will run concurrently.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 437 439—Revision—Order of discharge—Practice.

It is only as a Court of last resort, after application has been made to the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge, that the Judicial Commissioner will interfere, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, with an order of discharge. [p. 944, col. 1.]

Criminal revision of the order in Criminal Case No. 80 of 1918, decided on the 8th August 1919, of the Sub Divisional Magistrate Akola.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Non-Applicants.

Mr. P. Lobo, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This is an application asking this Court to interfere in revision and to set aside the order of discharge passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Akola, who has discharged the three non-applicants in a case in which the applicant accused them of murdering his father. No application has been made to the District Magistrate nor yet to the Sessions Judge under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code. It is the practice of this Court not to interfere in revision except as a Court of last resort. As in the present case no good reasons are shown for not applying to the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge, this application is rejected. The copy of the judgment filed here may be returned to the applicant.

Where a person is prosecuted for having erected a scaffolding in a street in contravention of the provisions of section 265 of the U. P. Municipalities Act, it is not the duty of the prosecution to prove affirmatively that the scaffolding caused actual obstruction except in so far as that fact can be inferred from its existence.

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Etawah, dated the 27th February 1920.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order of the District Magistrate of Etawah, affirming a conviction and sentence of fine of Rs. 5 imposed upon the applicant, Chunni Lal, for having erected a scaffolding in a street in contravention of the provisions of section 265 of the Local Municipalities Act (Act No. II of 1916).

The first ground taken is that it is not proved affirmatively that the scaffolding erected by the applicant caused any obstruction. A comparison of the wording of sub-clauses (d) and (e) of section 265, clause 1, of the Act with the sub-clause which precedes and the sub-clause which follows, seems to me to show that it did not lie on the prosecution to prove affirmatively that the scaffolding caused actual obstruction, except in so far as that fact could be inferred from its existence. The other two pleas taken in the petition to this Court have not been argued. I have, however, been pressed with one point, not taken in the petition, namely, that the Municipal Board, before it ordered this prosecution, had realised from Chunni Lal the ordinary tax or charge for erecting a scaffolding. I do not say that a receipt formally issued by the Municipal Board for due payment of such a tax or charge might not amount to a written permission for the erection of the scaffolding. Something might depend upon the wording of the particular receipt. In this case the receipt was not produced by the accused in his defence or put in evidence in the Magistrate's Court. It very possibly relates to a charge levied on the previous erection of a scaffolding which had been subsequently demolished. The record shows that the present prosecution was instituted in respect of a second or subsequent erection of the scaffolding. I do not think any case is made out for interference.

I reject the application.

UDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 21 OF 1919.

Present :—Mr. Stuart, A. J. C., and Pandit Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.

THE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, BAHRAICH, MANAGER, COURT OF WARDS, NANPARA ESTATE—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 50—Will, attestation of—Attestation proper—U. P. Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912), ss. 17, 18—Claim put in late, when extinguished—Collector, duty of.

Under the provisions of section 50 of the Succession Act it is not necessary for attesting witnesses to actually see the testator's fingers move as his signature is made. It is only necessary that the witnesses have a clear view of the testator when he is in the act of signing. [p. 951, col. 1.]

The provisions of sections 17 and 18 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act protect the Court of Wards against having claims which may be dishonest claims rushed upon them at a late period. But the provisions of these sections are not intended to bar persons who have made an honest mistake and have preferred their claims late. [p. 952, cols. 1 & 2.]

The interpretation of section 18 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act is that when a claimant puts in a claim late the Collector should write to him and ask why he did not put in his claim within the right time and what was the cause of his failure. If the claimant is unable to satisfy the Collector by showing sufficient cause for his failure to put in his claim within the right time then and then only is the claim held to be extinguished. [p. 953, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

STUART, A. J. C.—Raja Muhammad Siddik Khan, Talukdar of the Nanpara Taluka in the Bahraich district, an estate worth over two crores of rupees with an annual income of over Rs. 8,00,000, executed a Will in Bombay in January 1906. He died in Mecca on 13th December 1907. He had married in the following order—Rani Kamar Zamani, Rani Saltanat, Rani Dilafza and Rani Champa. He had gone through the ceremony of marriage with Rani Nasim Sahri, after he married Rani Champa. He could not marry legally more than four wives under his personal law. He asserted that before his marriage with Nasim Sahri had taken place he had divorced Rani Kamar Zamani. Dilafza, Champa and Nasim Sahri were maid-servants in the Zenana before their marriages. He left no children at his death. He was survived by the five ladies above-mentioned and his sisters the Rani of Utraula and the Rani of Muhamdi.

Under the Will, the estate was left to Rani Nasim Sahri for life with power to adopt, and then to Rani Saltanat with power to adopt. Rani Nasim Sahri forfeited her rights under the Will by marrying a brother of Rani Saltanat in May 1908.

At the time of the Raja's death, the estate was under the management of the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards instituted an inter-pleader suit that the Court might determine succession to the estate.

In this suit—

Rani Kamar Zamani claimed the estate denying the divorce, and contesting the Will :

Rani Saltanat claimed the estate under the Will :

Rani Dilafza claimed maintenance and dower under the Will :

Rani Champa claimed maintenance and dower under the Will :

Rani Nasim Sahri accepted the Will and admitted that she had forfeited her rights thereunder by her re-marriage. She claimed dower only.

The Rani of Utraula asserted Rani Kamar Zamani's divorce, contested the Will and contested the marriages of Ranis Saltanat, Dilafza, Champa and Nasim Sahri. She claimed the estate under the provisions of clause 11, section 22, Act I of 1869 :

Three other persons put in claims which were dismissed on merits.

While proceedings were pending in the Trial Court, Rani Saltanat adopted Saadat Ali Khan, minor son of the Rani of Muhamdi, and nephew of the deceased. Rani Kamar Zamani and the Rani of Utraula then compromised, and contest ceased between them and Rani Saltanat. It was agreed by this compromise that proprietary title in certain villages in the estate should be given to Rani Kamar Zamani ; that cash payments should be made to Rani Kamar Zamani, and the Ranis of Muhamdi and Utraula, and certain annuities should be paid to the Rajas of Muhamdi and Utraula and Rani Kamar Zamani; that the Ranis of Muhamdi and Utraula should enjoy life-interests, and that the estate should eventually pass to Saadat Ali Khan. Contest proceeded. The Trial Judge decided that the Will was genuine, but that claims and allowances under the terms of the Will could not be decreed in the inter-pleader suit; that claims for dower could not be decreed in the inter-pleader suit; that Rani Saltanat Begam was the ahle biradari wife of Raja Muhammad Siddik Khan but that she had lost all right of succession to the Taluka after the adoption of Saadat Ali Khan, and that the marriages of Dilafza, Champa and Nasim Sabri were not established. He dismissed the remaining claims and passed a decree according to the terms of the compromise. Against that decision Rani Saltanat, Rani Dilafza and Rani Nasim Sabri, amongst others, appealed. These three ladies subsequently withdrew their appeals under the terms of a compromise made between them on the one side, and Rani Kamar Zamani, the Ranis of Muhamdi, and Utraula, and Saadat Ali Khan on the other side. In the subsequent appeal this Court varied the decision of the Trial Judge only on the question of the marriages of Ranis Dilafza, Champa and Nasim Sabri. Since this Court's decision of the 28th May 1914 the Court of Wards has been managing the estate on behalf of Rani Kamar Zamani, Saadat Ali Khan, and the other beneficiaries under the decree. The notification taking the Nanpara Estate under the Court of Wards appeared in the United Provinces Gazette of 20th June 1914, and the notification under section 17, Court of Wards Act, Local Act IV of 1912, appeared in the United Provinces Gazette of 27th June 1914.

The following suits were put in subsequently against the Court of Wards as manager of the estate, its wards being Rani Kamar Zamani, Saadat Ali Khan, and the other beneficiaries:—

(1). A suit by Musammat Mehdi Begam, mother of Rani Saltanat, for arrears of annuity alleged to be payable to her under the provisions of the Will.

(2). A suit by Musammat Ketki, sister of Rani Champa, for arrears of annuity alleged to be payable to her under the provisions of the Will.

The suits were tried and dismissed by the learned Additional District Judge of Lucknow. Appeal No. 18 of 1919* has been filed against the dismissal of the first suit. Appeal No. 21 of 1919 has been filed against the dismissal of the second suit. The Court of Wards in both suits admitted that the Will, as executed on the 8th January 1906, was a good Will. It agreed with the plaintiffs that it was duly executed and attested by the testator who was of sound disposing mind, but it asserted that, out of the annuities claimed in the suits, only an annuity to Mehdi Begam of Rs. 200 a month was authorised in the Will as executed and attested, and that she was estopped from claiming anything under that annuity.

To understand the nature of the contest in both suits it is necessary to examine the circumstances in which the Will came to be prepared.

Raja Muhammad Siddik Khan, at the time of the execution of the Will, was living in Bombay with Ranis Saltanat, Dilafza, Champa, and Nasim Sabri. He had no children. He had separated from Rani Kamar Zamani, with whom he had had a violent quarrel. He believed that he had divorced her validly. It is immaterial whether he had good grounds for this belief. It is agreed that this was his belief. He had devoted much thought and care to the preparation of a Will, by which he would disinherit Rani Kamar Zamani and devise his property according to his own desires. He had engaged Mr. Abdul Rauf, Barrister-at-law, to draft this Will, retaining this gentleman in Bombay and paying him fees to devote his whole time to his service. The consultations between the Raja and Mr. Rauf were kept secret. The position was as follows, Rani Saltanat was a lady of good family and the senior then in the Zenana. Rani Nasim Sabri was an ex maid-servant of no family, and the junior in the Zenana. The Raja, for reasons which are not very clear on the record, made up his mind deliberately to prefer Nasim Sabri. He naturally wished to keep his decision quiet. So he instructed Mr. Abdul Rauf to employ a man unconnected with his household to draft the body of the Will. Mr. Rauf took a man called Anwar-ud-din for the purpose.

The Will consists of the body and four lists. The succession to the Taluka is laid down in the body. The ninth clause declares that certain property has been set aside in order that its profits may provide a fund for the payment of annuities to the Raja's mother, Ranis Saltanat, Dilafza, and Champa and certain relatives and servants whose names were to be added in a list to be attached called list 4.

It would have been better if the names of these annuitants had been entered in the body of the Will. It was, however, clearly the Raja's intention that the names should be placed in the list, and he was able by so doing to add to the names later. It is agreed that the Raja was a masterful man who brooked little or no interference with his plans and views even from a trusted legal adviser and that, although of sound disposing mind, he was eccentric and lavish with his money.

List 1 is a list of all the landed property, other than house property, in the Taluka.

List 2 is a list of the property the profits of which were set aside to pay the annuities.

List 3 is a list of house property.

List 4 contains the names of annuitants and the amounts of annuities.

There was nothing in the contents of lists 1—3 which could reveal the testator's intentions, and only one entry in list 4 out of those which were not subsequently written with the Raja's own hand would reveal to a person who had not seen clause 9 that the amounts were annuities and not legacies. The use of the word "salary" in the twenty-first entry might have connoted the idea of an annuity to an astute reader. Such a reader would not, however, have been in a position to know whether the amount was payable annually or monthly. Thus, there is nothing requiring secrecy in the first three lists, and very little in the fourth.

According to both sides in both appeals the body of the Will (with the exception of certain blanks), the first three lists, and the portion of the fourth list down to the twenty-first entry were faired out and ready on the 8th January 1906. On that day the Raja was in his rented residence in Bombay. Mr. Rauf and three attesting witnesses, Dr. Chowksey, Mr. Jussawala, and Captain Diarmid of the Mercantile Marine, were present. A Sub-Registrar arrived. It was intended on completion of the Will to place it in a sealed cover and deposit it with the Sub-Registrar. The Raja, however, took so much time in filling up the blanks that the Sub-Registrar went away. After he had gone, the Will was initialled by the Raja, and attested by the witnesses. Lists Nos. 1, 2, 3 were initialled by the Raja, and attested by the witnesses on the first page of each list. List No. 4 was initialled by the Raja and attested by the witnesses at the bottom of the first page (the thirty-third page of the document) underneath entry No. 21. Amongst the first twenty-one entries an annuity of Rs. 200 was allotted to Musammat Mehdi Begam. Nothing more was done that day. So far, both sides agree in both appeals. All the above facts are not brought out as clearly as they might be on the evidence on the record of the two suits, but the parties agree that these are the facts. This Bench having heard the appeal in the inter-pleader suit in which the same facts were brought out in great detail was in a favourable position to appreciate the points.

The first point in dispute is this. Musammat Ketki's Counsel urges that the next ten entries (which include Musammat Ketki's name) on list 4 were on the list when the Will was signed and attested on 8th January 1906. The Trial Judge has found that they were not then there but subsequently added between the time of signature and attestation and the 23rd January 1906.

The evidence is here very confused and in places conflicting. Mr. Rauf, when giving evidence in Musammat Ketki's suit in 1917, had a recollection but was not quite clear that, before the Will was executed on the 8th January 1906, Musammat Ketki's name was on the list. His statement made in the inter-pleader suit in 1910 contains a passage which we consider has been rightly admitted in evidence to corroborate his present statement to the effect that these entries were in the list before the Will was executed on the 8th January 1906. Anwar-ud din has deposed in these proceedings that he prepared List 4 though he did not prepare Lists 1, 2 and 3. Mr. Abdul Rauf in these proceedings was, however, under the impression that list 4 had been prepared by one of two brothers Muhammad Ali Naki or Ahmad Zaki. This does not appear to have been his recollection in the former suit. But his recollection in the former suit cannot be produced in evidence in this suit except for the purposes of contradicting or confirming him. Musammat Ketki's learned Counsel endeavoured to produce the former statement neither to corroborate nor to contradict but in order to supersede the present statement by the former statement. The point is not important, as Ahmad Zaki was called as a witness in the present proceedings. He has deposed distinctly that the first twenty-one entries were in existence at the time that the Will was executed on the 8th January and that, subsequently, he was given a list after the Will was executed of ten names with amounts against them to copy on the next page—(the thirty fourth page of the document). He says that Mr. Rauf gave him this list. The learned Additional District Judge, an officer of great experience, heard these witnesses and believed that Ahmad Zaki was telling the truth. We see no reason to differ with his conclusion. Mr. Rauf's recollection need not necessarily have been good on this point even in 1910. The question here resolves itself into a consideration of the respective credibility of Anwar-ud-din and Ahmad Zaki. There is no doubt as to the fact that Anwar-ud din wrote the body of the Will. But, as has been already pointed out, there was very little reason, on the theory that the Raja wished to keep his intentions as to the devolution of the estate from the ladies in the Zenana, why the lists should not have been faired out by persons in his employment. He had many persons in his employment and while undoubtedly he would have had reason not to entrust them with the copying out of the body of the Will, he would have had very little reason not to entrust them with copying out List 4. He would have had no reason not to entrust them with the copying out of lists 1, 2 and 3. On the fact alone, that the learned Additional District Judge, who was in the best position to judge of the credibility of witnesses, believe the evidence of Ahmad Zaki and did not believe the evidence of Anwar-ud-din, we should not be justified in coming to a contrary finding as Anwar-ud-din broke down badly in cross-examination and Ahmad Zaki's evidence in our opinion was not shaken. Some other reasons have been pressed on our attention for accepting the learned trial Judge's view upon the point. The first twenty-one entries are numbered. The next ten entries are not numbered. If the fair copy had left the hand of the copier as a whole, as would have been the case if the first thirty-one entries had been on the list at the time of the execution on the 8th January 1906, there would have been no reason why they should not all have been numbered. But, apart from this, there is one very significant fact. The fifteenth and sixteenth entries on the list run as follows:—

15. Biradar Nawab Muhammad Sultan Khan Sahib—Rs. 5.

16. Biradar Nawab Muhammad Ata Khan Sahib—Rs. 25.

These two gentlemen are brothers of Rani Saltanat Begam. The fifteenth and sixteenth entries are crossed out and the crossing out is initialled by Raja Muhammad Siddik. The seventh and eighth entries over the page are in the names of the same two gentlemen allowing them an annuity of Rs. 400 a month each. From this it would clearly appear that the Raja had, on reading the list, considered that the amounts of Rs. 5 and Rs. 25 a month for these two gentlemen were too small and that he crossed out the entries and directed a subsequent list to be prepared to contain their names amongst others and give them Rs. 400 a month each. Further, it is very noticeable that the initials of the Raja and the attestations of the witnesses are under the twenty-first entry. If the list was ready at the time that the Will was executed on the 8th January 1906 the initials of the Raja and the signatures of the attesting witnesses would more probably have been placed under the name of Munga Khawas. These facts support the learned Trial Judge's conclusions. We accept the conclusion that the names of Bala and Ketki and the rest, down to Munga Khawas, were entered on a list which was prepared between the 8th January and the 23rd January 1906.

We now come to the events of the 23rd January 1906. On that date the Raja, Mr. Rauf, Dr. Chowksey, and Mr. Jussawala again assembled in the Raja's rented house in Bombay. The Sub-Registrar was again sent for. The evidence here is quite clear and there is no contest as to what happened. The Raja sat at a table at some distance from Mr. Rauf, the Sub-Registrar, and the attesting witnesses. He took the Will and proceeded to write upon it. A blank page had been left after his initials and the signatures of the attesting witnesses at page 11 and about two-thirds of a blank page had been left on the thirty-fourth page which was the second page of List 4. The Raja wrote on both pages. We shall consider, subsequently, what he wrote on the twelfth page. On the thirty fourth page he wrote out the names of other annuitants in his own hand. The attesting witnesses were in a place where they could see the Raja writing. They could not see what he was writing and they were not in a position to see whether he initialled his additions or corrections. When he had completed what he was doing, he sent for the attesting witnesses. He put a piece of blotting paper over what he had written on the thirty-fourth page and they attested on the margin. They did not see what he had written on the twelfth page. They attested there also. The Will was then placed in a sealed cover and handed over to the Sub-Registrar for safe deposit. When it was subsequently opened it was discovered that the Raja had initialled on the twelfth page, but had omitted to initial on the thirty-fourth page, although he had altered an item of Rs. 300 to Rs. 400 in one place on the thirty-fourth page and initialled the correction. It is argued on behalf of the Court of Wards that there was no execution and attestation as provided for by law on the 23rd January 1906, and that the omission by the Raja to initial the thirty-fourth page, in any circumstances, deprives all bequests made in his own hand-writing of validity.

We shall now consider what he wrote on the twelfth page. A correct translation of what he wrote on that page is as follows:—

"May God protect me from Satan! I commence in the name of God who is most merciful and most compassionate.

"God's will must always be done through the grace of God.

"Every man looks to his own interest whoever he may be. It is hoped that the Presence (i. e., God) will look with favourable patronage upon the deed of inheritance which has been executed and registered." (It is to be noted that, in the strict sense of the word, the Will was not registered. It was placed in a sealed cover for safe custody. But, under the provisions of Act I of 1869, the effect of placing such a Will with a Sub-Registrar for safe custody is the same as the effect of registration. Of course, the Will had not, at the time that the words were written, been placed in a sealed cover for safe custody but this was done directly afterwards).

"On account of the desire, that is to say, the restless anxiety which a man of religion necessarily feels, it is essential in this unsubstantial world that communion with the Prophet should be an accomplished fact in lifetime." (It is very difficult to translate these words. The Raja was, admittedly, a man who had a strong religious element in his character which was undoubtedly genuine, though his conduct was not always all that should have been desired. He was a man of very little education and had no claims to be a clear writer. Most of this may be taken as an expression of religious devotion on the part of a not well-educated man). "The life of man is divided into four parts." (Some diagrams were drawn after this.) "I think that, on account of the press of mundane matters, I have not been able to enter most important matters. But the remembrance of God is most important. The greatest reliance should be placed on God. So far as was in my power, I executed this Will in favour of the Ranis who have been faithful to me." (This is a clear indication of the difference of treatment between Rani Kamar Zamani and Ranis Saltanat, Dilafza, Champa and Nasim Sahri) "I shall pass my life in prayer to God, the perusal of the Holy Kuran, pilgrimages to sacred places, and walking in the paths of Holy men—desires which I have always cherished. God is omnipresent and everything else is transitory. I shall perform all the duties which devolve on me as a man with pleasure and consent. I shall supervise these duties honestly. I have always relied upon the Government, to which I am religiously inclined. I have been vigilant to bear no ill-will against my enemies who wish to harm me and disgrace me. I am thankful to the Holy God who has been so good to me. Amen, Amen, Amen. From the present moment to and after death I expect to be face to face with God who is imperishable. I pray, with folded hands. May God protect me,"

He then affixed his initials and added—

"My last salutation, with folded hands to the Government, may be accepted."

He then initialled again.

Now, what is the effect of this? The learned Counsel for the Court of Wards has argued that all this means nothing, and that it contains no more than pious expressions of a mind which, though admitted to be a good disposing mind, was the mind of an eccentric man and nothing more. But this is not the view that we would take. While admitting that the religious exordium was hardly necessary in a testamentary document, we do not lose sight of the fact that, amongst Muhammadans, especially Muhammadans of a religious turn of mind as the Raja certainly was, it is frequently thought only becoming and right to introduce pious reflections containing clear statements as to the authority of the Deity in worldly affairs and the submission of the creature into testamentary documents. So we do not consider that the many pious expressions, in any way, invalidate the effect, and the effect appears to us to be this. Although the Will, so far as it was in existence, had been duly executed and attested on the 8th January 1906, there still remained under the testator's desires certain additions to be made. Those additions were not made in the body of the Will but were made in list 4. Having made these additions, the Raja felt that a peroration was necessary, and in this peroration he states distinctly that this is his last Will and Testament and that he wishes that God may look favourably upon him. He states his main reason for making the Will—the desire to benefit those ladies who were his wives and who had been faithful to him. He explains that his future attitude towards life would be one of religious devotion although he does not wish to neglect his temporal affairs. We look upon this as in the testator's opinion the final execution of the Will. In the previous judgment in the inter-pleader suit, it was stated, when stating the facts, that the Will had been executed on the 8th January 1906. But the point did not then arise as to when it had been executed and was not material to the case. After examining the matter more closely, we are of opinion that the Will was executed on the 23rd January 1906, provided that the signature and the attestation are correct. Now, there can be no doubt as to the fact that the initials at page 12 are the initials of the Raja, and initials operate as a signature. The learned Counsel for the Court of Wards has argued that there was no sufficient execution or attestation under the provisions of section 50 of Act X of 1865. Unless the provisions of this section are complied with, the Will will not be a good Will under the provisions of Act I of 1869 so as to affect Talukdari property. The section lays down that the testator shall sign or affix his mark to the Will, or that it shall be signed by some other person in his presence and by his direction. There can be no doubt as to the fact that the Raja affixed his initials to the Will on the 23rd January 1906. It next lays down that the signature or mark of the testator, or the signature of the person signing for him, shall be so placed that it shall appear that it was intended thereby to give effect to the writing as a Will. Here the learned Counsel for the Court of Wards argues that this last passage has nothing to do with giving effect to the writing as a Will. We consider that it does so. It emphasizes the fact that this is the testator's Will and it introduces one new element that it is proposed to register the Will. The section continues that the Will shall be attested by two or more witnesses, each of whom must have seen the testator sign or affix his mark to the Will, or have seen some other person sign the Will, in the presence and by the direction of the testator, or have received from the testator a personal acknowldgment of his signature or mark, or of the signature of such other person, and each of the witnesses must sign the Will in the presence of the testator, but it shall not be necessary that more than one witness be present at the same time, and no particular form of attestation shall be necessary. The first point that arises is—Did Dr. Chowksey and Mr. Jussawala see the Raja affix his initials? The evidence is quite clear on the point. They were in the same room. From a little distance they saw him in the act of writing. At the distance that they were it was impossible for them to see whether he did or did not affix his initials at that time while he was in the act of writing. But, on the evidence as a whole, there can be no doubt to our minds that they saw him writing, that at the time of writing he signed by placing his initials upon the document, and that they saw him while he was doing this. We, therefore, find that they saw him sign the Will. The learned Counsel for the Court of Wards has referred us to the decision in Brown v. Skirrow (1), in which Gorell Barnes, J., found that, where a testatrix signed her Will in a shop, and one witness, who saw her sign, attested it, but the other witness, being at time when the testatrix and first witness signed, engaged at the other side of the shop with a person who stood between him and the testatrix, did not see them sign and did not know nor have the opportunity of knowing anything about what they had been engaged upon until after they had signed, when he was asked to be a witness, the testatrix did not sign in the presence of the second witness. The learned Judge did not appear to have approached this decision without some difficulty, but, in any circumstances, it would not affect the present case. The ratio decidendi there was that, as some person was between the testatrix and the second witness the second witness saw nothing. But here the witnesses had an unimpeded field of vision. It cannot, we think, be laid down, under the provisions of the Indian Succession Act, that it is necessary for a witness to actually see the fingures move as the signature is made. It is only necessary to satisfy ourselves that the witnesses had a clear view of the testator when he was in the act of signing. They certainly had this here and, as there can be no possible doubt to our minds as to the fact that the Raja did on the 23rd January 1906 sign this document while Mr. Jussawala and Dr. Chowksey were in the same room with him with an unimpeded field of vision, and as they both signed the Will as attesting witnesses in his presense, we find that the Will was executed not on the 8th January 1906 but on the 23rd January 1906 according to law. The absence of the testator's signature at the end of list 4 is not, in our opinion, material. We agree with the learned Trial Judge that the initials on the correction of 3 to 4 cannot operate as a signature of the list. But we do not consider that it was necessary for the testator to sign the list at all, or for the attesting witnesses to attest it. The signature and attestation to which we have already adverted, cover every thing in the Will, provided that we are satisfied that the entries in dispute were made with the knowledge and according to the wishes of the testator. These entries are two—one is the entry of Rs. 500 monthly allowance to Musammat Ketki which as we have found was written by the hand of Ahmad Zaki, and the other is an entry of a monthly allowance of Rs. 500 to Musammat Mehdi Begam, which was written with the Raja's own hand. With reference to the first entry, we are satisfied that it was made at the Raja's desire. Mr. Abdul Rauf was in his confidence. Mr. Abdul Rauf gave the list to Ahmad Zaki to copy. Musammat Ketki has deposed, and we see no reason to disbelieve her, that the Raja had told her about the time that the Will was executed that he was making provision for her therein. He had the entry in front of him at the time that he was making the subsequent entries in his own hand. In these circumstances, we find that the entry was made to his knowledge and with his consent. With regard to the second entry it is admitted by the learned Counsel for the Court of Wards that as the entry is in the Raja's own handwriting he cannot suggest that it was not made at his wish.

From what has been stated already, it will be seen that we find in favour of the appellant upon the main point. We find that an annuity of Rs. 500 a month was awarded to her validly by a Will; that the Will is a good Will under Act I of 1869, and that it binds the Talukdari property. We were addressed by the learned Counsel for the appellant in the alternative on the ground that, if the Will was not a good Will to bind the Talukdari property, it was a good Will under Muhammadan Law and that the legacy, being a demonstrative legacy, the amount could be recovered from the non-Talukdari property. But, in view of our finding that the Will is a good Will against the Taluka property, this point need not be decided.

There remains the question as to whether the whole claim is barred under the provisions of sections 17 and 18 of Local Act IV of 1 12. The notification under section 17 of the Local Act was made on the 27th June 1914. The appellant asserts that she sent a registered letter, containing a notice, to the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich on the 27th November 1914. She admittedly sent a letter, in which she referred to a notice of the 27th November 1914, on the 10th July 1915 to the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich. The learned Trial Judge has found that she never sent a notice on the 27th November 1914 and that the evidence that she has produced on the point is not credible. The appellant greatly prejudiced her case while giving evidence on commission on this point. While under cross examination on the 7th November 1917 she stated that the notice had been sent by registered post. She had not put forward this date of the notice in her plaint distinctly and did not file a copy of the notice or the registration receipt, although she gave a detailed account of it in her replication. While under cross-examination on commission, she stated, apparently for the first time, that the notice had been sent registered and then stated that she had the registration receipt in her box. The obvious question that was likely to follow was, why, in these circumstances, she had not produced it. She then said that she was feeling very ill and could answer no further questions. A receipt was produced on the 10th September. She did not return to the witness box till the 12th September 1917. On this the learned Trial Judge has found, and has probably found rightly, that the story of the notice having been sent by registered post in Novem ber 1914 is untrue. But, as he had dismissed the suit on another point, he did not go into the question of the effect of failure to have given the notice requried. The provisions of sections 17 and 18 of Local Act IV of 1912 protect the Court of Wards against having claims (which may be dishonest claims) rushed upon them at a late period. But the provisions of these sections are not intended to bar persons who have made an honest mistake and have preferred their claims late. Section 18 contains the following proviso :—

"Provided that if the claimant can show sufficient cause for failure to comply with the provisions of section 17, the Collector shall receive his claim, and the claim so received shall be deemed to have been notified under section 17."

We have to see whether this provision was complied with. Musammat Ketki undoubtedly made a claim on 10th July 1915. She sent this claim to the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich. The Deputy Commissioner's office is at Bahraich. The Court of Wards office is at Nanpara, a considerable distance away. We have found that the plaintiff-appellant has not been able to establish by reliable evidence that she sent a claim on the 27th November 1914. There is nothing on the record to support the conclusion that she did not send a claim on the 27th November 1914. The Court of Wards were administering the estate. They had accepted the Will of Raja Muhammad Siddik Khan as genuine and they were bound to carry out the provisions of the Will. The attitude of the Court of Wards towards Musammat Ketki's claim may best be seen from a letter which the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich sent to the Commissioner on the 21st July 1915 after receiving her letter of the 10th of July. It is as follows :—

"I have the honour to state that Musammat Ketki sent in an application on the 10th July 1915 to the effect that her name is down in the Will executed by Raja Muhammad Siddik Khan and that she claims Rs. 42,000 on account of gusara from the date of the Raja's death to the end of December 1914, out of the property left by the late Raja Muhammad Siddik Khan.

"Her name exists in the Will executed by Raja Muhammad Siddik Khan and the amount of gusara is fixed at Rs. 500 per mensem. This case is on all fours with that of Dr. Chowksey, the only difference being that Dr. Chowksey declared after the demise of the Raja, that he declined to take the guzara and now he serves the Court of Wards with a notice, whilst Musammat Ketki has never disowned the guzara before. I have, in connection with Dr. Chowksey's notice, stated that other persons whose names are down in the Will will claim their guzara, one of whom is Musammat Ketki. The Will provides a guzara of Rs. 500 per mensem to Musammat Bela who has since died. Musammat Champa and Musammat Ketki both allege themselves to be her relatives and legal heirs and claim her guzara. The case is almost of the same type as mentioned above. They never joined any compromise and their names exist neither in compromise I nor compromise II. I think they are not entitled to guzara unless they prove the Will which will entail heavy expenses. As the matter is intricate and difficult of solution. I solicit instructions as to what reply should be given to them; but, before a reply is given, the able and learned Vakils who conducted the interpleader suit from beginning to end, viz., Mr. Muhammad Nasim, Advocate, and Mr. Manuel, Pleader, should be consulted and reply given after consultation."

S. N. DAR, B.A., LL.B.,
Vakil High Court, Kashmir

This letter shows that at that time there was not, in the mind of the Court of Wards management, the slightest suspicion that the annuity to Musammat Ketki was not allowable under the Will. The pleas which have been since urged before the Trial Court and before us to the effect that the grant of annuity is bad for want of due execution and attestation had not then occurred to the Deputy Commissioner. It is not surprising that the pleas did not occur to him, as such pleas could only have been available after taking competent legal opinion. The latter concludes rightly with a recommendation that a legal opinion should be taken. So far as the Court of Wards was concerned, the attitude on the 21st July 1915 was this;

"Her name exists in the Will executed by Raja Muhammad Siddik Khan and the amount of guzara is fixed at Rs. 500 per mensem. This case is on all fours with that of Dr. Chowksey, the only difference being that Dr. Chowksey declared, after the demise of the Raja, that he declined to take the gusara, and now he serves the Court of Wards with a notice, whilst Musammat Ketki has never disowned the gusara before. I have, in connection with Dr. Chowksey's notice, stated that other persons whose names are down in the Will will claim their guzara, one of whom is Musammat Ketki."

This is a most extraordinary position. The Court of Wards were managing the estate. As managing the estate they had to administer the provisions of the Will. The attitude appears to be that they considered themselves aggrieved if any person entitled to benefit under the Will should claim it. What may or may not have happened in the case of Dr Chowksey we do not know, though it appears clear that, as he was an attesting witness, no benefit could have accrued to him under the Will. The Deputy Commissioner says in effect—"As far as I know the bequest is a good bequest though I propose" (and rightly) "to take a legal opinion as to its validity. But I consider it most undesirable that people who have good bequests under the Will should claim them." Later on, follows the extraordinary sentence.—

"I think they are not entitled to gusara unless they prove the Will, which will entail heavy expenses."

Now, the Court of Wards were administering the Will. It was under the terms of the Will that Saadat Ali Khan, their ward, had been adopted. We hardly like to draw the conclusion that the Court of Wards was hoping that beneficiaries under the Will would be deterred from taking their benefits by the prospect of heavy legal expenses. However, we are not so much concerned with criticising the conduct of the persons responsible for the management at the period; as pointing out that the action of the Court of Wards did not comply with the proviso to section 18. Our interpretation of section 18 is this, that when a claimant puts in a claim late the Collector should write to him and ask why he did not put in his claim within the right time and what was the cause of his failure. If the claimant is unable to satisfy the Collector, by showing sufficient cause for his failure to put in his claim within the right time, then, and then only, is the claim held to be extinguished. It is quite clear that the Collector did not ask Musammat Ketki for her explanation of an omission to file the claim within the right time. He should have written to her to say that he had never received the claim which she alleged she made on the 27th November 1914 and that her present claim was six months too late. At that time the matter was fresh. She might have been able to prove then, by reliable evidence, although she has failed to prove now, that she had made a claim on the 27th November 1914. She might have been able to set up to his satisfaction that as she was a parda-nashin woman of no education she had not understood the provisions of the section. She might have been able to prove that her claim, through circumstances which were not within her own control, had never reached him, and, if this had been done, her claim might have been accepted under the provisions of section 18. We consider that the failure of the Deputy Commissioner to take the proper action under the provisions of section 18 deprives the Court of Wards of the plea that no suit can lie for the arrears prior to 27th November 1914. It is to be noted that the Court of Wards admits liability after the 27th November 1914. We, therefore, decide against the learned Trial Judge upon the point of law. We accept his finding that it is not established by reliable evidence that a notice was sent on the 27th November 1914.

As a result of the above findings, the appeal must succeed. The appellant is entitled to arrears at the rate of Rs. 500 a month from 31st December 1907 to the date of the institution of the suit, with interest at the six per cent. per annum and full costs of both Courts. We order accordingly.

The prayer for a declaration that the heirs of the plaintiff continue to get the said allowance generation after generation is refused as, under the terms of the Will, the annuity is only for life. The prayer for lien on the property secured is also refused.

KANHAIYA LAL, A. J. C.—I accept the conclusions at which my learned colleague has arrived, except in regard to the weight to be attached to the testimony of Mr. (now Mr. Justice) Rauf, given in the earlier case when the facts were fresher in his mind as to the existence in the list of annuitants on the 8th January 1906 of the names up to Munga Khawas, and the inference to be drawn from the failure of the Court of Wards to repudiate the receipt of the application demanding the annuity referred to in the subsequent applications of the applicant, dated the 10th July 1915, and the 29th July 1915, to impugn the validity of the claim under section 18 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912) when those applications were received.

An application of that nature sent to the Deputy Commissioner by registered post might easily get mixed up somewhere, and, reading the evidence adduced with the year borne by the wrapper (Exhibit A 2) and the conduct of the Court of Wards, I am not prepared to entertain the plea now raised. I agree entirely with the order proposed.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 152 B OF 1918.

August 9, 1920.

RAMOO—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

SADOO AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Construction of document—Grant—Meaning doubtful—Rule, applicable.

The correct rule of interpretation, where a deed contains words of doubtful import, is not that it should be construed in favour of the grantor, but is that contained in the maxim verba chartarum fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem, which means that, as between the grantor and the grantee, if the words of the grant or instrument are of doubtful import, that construction shall be placed upon them which is most favourable to the grantee. [p. 955, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree passed by the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 322 of 1913, dated the 28th February 1918.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. V. Kunday, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is not now disputed that the field in suit originally belonged to Laxman, the common ancestor of the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 4 and 5. It is admitted that there was a partition between Laxman's sons. The plaintiff alleged that the field in suit remained joint while the defendant's allegation is that the field fell to their ancestor on partition. The plaintiff relies on an alleged admission in a mortgage-deed (Exhibit P 3), dated 5th September 1894 executed by Purnaji, father of the defendants, in favour of Kanhuji, the father of the plaintiff. This mortgage-deed has been translated in the judgment under appeal. It is admitted that the punctuation in the translation does not exist in the original and also that the original of th words "in these" may mean "in it". The learned Additional District Judge considers that the property mortgaged is merely one-half share of four big mango trees and the admission contained in the mortgage-deed, therefore, refers merely to the other half share in these mango trees.

The learned Additional District Judge admits that there are difficulties in the construction adopted by him. The term sthavar (immoveable property) does not usually refer to trees and it is somewhat curious to suppose that only two trees ('fields' in the judgment appears to be a slip of the pen) were mortgaged by this deed.

I add that the words of the witness "the aforesaid immoveable proprety is my ancestral estate and the wahiwat (management or cultivation) is also mine" are unusual, if the reference is merely to trees. Large mango trees are not supposed to require management or cultivation.

The learned Judge further states:—"that it is difficult to say, by mere construction of words, that both the fields and the trees were mortgaged and not merely the trees." But the Judge holds that an accurate and strict construction of the words in the recitals would only give the mortgage of the trees.

It appears to me that the learned Judge means by a strict construction, a construction in favour of the grantor: he considers that the grantee cannot get more than what he gives him on the construction most unfavourable to him. This does not appear to be the correct rule of interpretation. The maxim verba chartarum fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem means that, as between the grantor and the grantee, if the words of the grant or instrument are of doubtful import, that construction shall be placed upon them which is most favourable to the grantee: see Broom's Legal Maxims, 8th Edition, pages 453, 454.

Even on the hypothesis that the document must be interpreted without favour to either party, I consider that the property which it was intended to mortgage was a share in the field with the four trees. The difficulties mentioned above in constructing a document as a mortgage of trees only are serious.

In this Court neither party has referred to existing circumstances: these do not tell in favour of the defendants. If the trees were held jointly it may well be that the field was also held jointly.

It is admitted before me that, if the admission in the mortgage-deed refers to a share in the field in suit, the plaintiff's suit is within time. It is not denied that, with the help of this admission, the plaintiff has proved his ownership of the share at the time of the admission.

The appeal, therefore, succeeds. There is no decision regarding the claim for mesne profits. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, set aside and the case is remanded for decision of the points still at issue. There will be no refund of Court-fees. Costs in this appeal will be costs in the suit.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 22 (2)—Occupancy holding—Purchase by co-proprietor—Purchaser, position of—Partition of estate, effect of.

Under clause (2) of section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a co-proprietor acquiring an occupancy holding by purchase is entitled to retain possession of it on payment of rent to his co-sharers. The mere fact that the estate in which the holding in situate is partitioned among the co-proprietors and the holding is allotted to some other co-proprietor, would not entitle the latter to eject the co-proprietor who had purchased the holding. [p. 957, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Patna.

Messrs. Purnendu Narain Sinha, Fakhr-ud-din, Kulwant Sahay, Ragho Prasad, Rai Guru Saran Prasad, Bimola Charan Sinha and S. Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. N. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession from the defendants. The lands in suit are survey plots Nos. 979 and 1411. The plaintiffs and the defendants were co-proprietors in the village in which the lands in dispute are situate. The Record of Rights was finally published in the year 1910. Khewat No. 1 relates to the defendants. In it there is a remark that the father of the defendants, by purchase from the other tenants, is in possession, under section 22 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, of 2 acres, 42 decimals by paying rent of Rs. 3-14-0 odd to the other co-proprietors. Plot No. 979 is shown in Khatian (Exhibit 40) bakasht kharidar. No Khatian of plot No. 1411 has been filed. There was a Collectorate partition of the estate under Act V of 1907 B. C. which terminated in the year 1324 (1917). In the Batwara proceedings, the measurements and the Survey Record of Rights were adopted for the purpose of partition under the Batwara Law. Exhibit 3 relates to plot No. 979 and Exhibit 2 to Plot No. 1411. By the Batwara, these plots have been allotted to the plaintiffs' patti.

The plaintiffs, therefore, commenced an action in the Court of the Munsif of Patna for a declaration of his title to and for recovery of possession of the land from the defendants.

The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the lands in suit were their kasht lands and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover possession of the same.

The Munsif decreed the suit. The learned District Judge set aside the decree of the Munsif and dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs have, therefore, appealed to this Court.

The sole question for consideration in this case is, whether the lands in suit are the bakasht of the maliks or the kasht of the defendants. On behalf of the appellants it is contended that the plaintiffs are co-proprietors in the village and as such acquired the lands in suit and, therefore, their possession over the land was that of proprietors, and not as tenants and that, after the partition, they had no right to retain possession of the same. This contention is based upon section 22, clause (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act which enacts that, "If the occupancy right in land is transferred to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor or joint permanent tenure-holder, he shall be entitled to hold the land subject to the payment to his co-proprietor or joint permanent tenure-holder of the shares of the rent which may be from time to time payable to them." In support of this contention, the decisions of this Court in the cases of Bahuria Janakdulari Kuar v. Bindeshwari Gir (1) and Stonewigg v. Dwarka Singh (2) were cited. The former case related to bakasht lands held separately among the proprietors by private arrangement previous to the partition, and it was held that the co-proprietor and his mortgagee are not entitled to claim exclusive possession of the bakasht lands and they all should be treated as the bakasht of all the proprietors in the partition. That case has no application to the present case, where the defendants, as co-proprietors, purchased the occupancy holdings of tenants in the village. The lands in the present case were originally the bakasht of the proprietors. In the latter case, the defendant was a co-proprietor and also a lessee. He claimed to have acquired occupancy rights in the lands in dispute. There was no evidence of his having purchased the holdings. His possession over them was said to be that of a lessee of the entire 16 annas of the Mauza, and it was held that, after the expiry of the lease he had no right to claim any right in the lands and that he could not, therefore, prevent the partition of the same among the co proprietors. There was no evidence in that case to show that the land was originally occupancy holding. On the other hand, the indication was that the lands were the proprietors' lands, bakasht or sirait. I do not for a moment conceive that the Legislature ever intended, or that the language of section 22, clause (2) can give rise to the interpretation, that a co-proprietor acquiring an occupancy holding by purchase, although entitled to retain possession of the same on payment of rent to his co-sharers, must give it up the moment the estate in which the land is situate is partitioned among the proprietors. It will be anomalous and, indeed, unjust to permit a co-proprietor, after the kasht lands in the estate have been purchased by another co proprietor at great expense, to go to the Collectorate partition and to claim the same as bakasht and to share in the acquisition to which he has not contributed a single farthing. The section clearly empowers a co-proprietor to hold possession of the kasht land purchased by him, the only condition imposed upon him being that he should pay rent therefor to his co-sharers. There is no limit of time of his possession nor is it controlled by any event, such as the partition of the estate. If his possession was to remain only for so long as the estate was not partitioned, it would have been clearly and unmistakably expressed by the Legislature. I do not, on principle, see any reason why a flourishing co sharer of a small fractional share in the village should be deprived of an opportunity of purchasing lands in his occupancy holdings in the village just in the same way as a stranger would be allowed to do. Neither law nor equity would make him worse than a stranger. It was not to decide the status of the defendant co-sharer in the present case as to whether he was an occupancy or a non-occupancy tenant. But there can be no question that, whatever be his status, he can resist the claim of possession made by the plaintiffs. In the case of Babu Ram Dheng v. Upendra Nath Koley (3) it was pointed out that the change in clause (2) by the Amending Act of 1907 does not seem to have altered the view as was previously understood, and that a fractional landlord who gets a transfer of an occupancy holding still acquires from the raiyat some sort of tenancy or intermediate interest which prevents him from treating the under raiyat as a trespasser. The decision in the case of Emamuddin v. Saiyid Mohammad Rashidul Huq (4) is based upon the same principle, vide also Raja Ram Sahu v. Jhanti Gope (5). It is needless to multiply authorities on the subject. It seems to me to be clear that the plaintiff's claim is entirely based upon section 22 (2) and that section does not entitle them to recover possession from the defendants, simply upon the ground that they as co-proprietors purchased the holding in question.

It is then said that in the Batwara Khatian the defendants allowed the land to be treated as bakasht, and hence they are not entitled to claim it as their tenancy right. True, they being co-sharers and parties to the partition proceedings are estopped from claiming otherwise than the Record of Rights in that case shows. Upon the basis of the Record of Rights, the valuations of the lands for the purpose of partition were determined and that principle was given effect to in the case of Baldeo Sahai v. Brajnandan Sahay (6) and it was held that the co-sharer is not permitted to show that the land entered as raiyati land was, as a matter of fact, zerait land. But the defendants in the present case do not claim otherwise that what the Batwara Khatian purports to record.

It has already been observed above that the Batwara Khatian shows the possession of the defendants as kharidar or purchaser under section 22(2), and that plot No. 979 has been recorded bakasht because it was in the possession of the proprietor. It is, however, neither the bakasht nor zerait. The Khatian entry, therefore, is not inconsistent with the claims of the defendants. The Survey Authorities did not dispute their rights. They simply recorded the possession and cleared it by mentioning the section of the Bengal Tenancy Act under which the co-proprietors defendants were holding under their purchase. It is for the Court to determine what that entry really means and, upon a true interpretation of that entry and section 22 (2), I am clearly of opinion that the plaintiffs are not entitled to eject the defendants and that the latter are still entitled to hold possession of the same on paying rent to the defendants and other co-sharers. The claim of the plaintiffs as regards plot No. 979 is not made out and the Court below was right in dismissing it.

Plot No. 1411, however, stands on different considerations. It was recorded both in the Survey and in the Batwara Khatian as the holding of Sheo Dusadh. Before the partition, the defendants took a surrender deed (Exhibit 5) from the son of Sheo Dusadh, dated the 27th January 1916. In that deed it is stated that the land in question, although recorded as the kasht of Sheo Dusadh, was in reality the khud kasht of the defendants and was, therefore, surrendered. That surrender took place before the partition proceedings terminated in 1917 and the defendants being co-proprietors have no right to take advantage of the surrender in their favour. The original tenant, Sheo Dusadh, or his son was not entitled to make a surrender of the holding to the part proprietors. The defendants cannot, therefore, claim any right of possession as tenants in respect of the plot No. 1411 on the basis of the said surrender. The surrender has been held to be invalid. The learned Judge has not disturbed that finding. The land in dispute has fallen by partition in the patti of the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs are, therefore, primarily entitled to possession of the same. The defendant's claim, based upon the surrender, cannot be of any avail as against the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession of the same. As Sheo Dusadh is not a party to the case, his right cannot be affected by this decision. No other evidence has been produced in this case, or referred to in the judgments of the Courts below or in the arguments. Again, the learned Vakil failed to show that plot No. 1411 was acquired by the defendants in any other way than by the surrender by the son of Sheo Dusadh in 1916.

The result is, that the plaintiffs' claim to plot No. 1411 has been made out and that they are entitled to a decree for possession as against the defendants. The Court below was wrong in dismissing the suit with regard to that plot.

The decision of the strict Judge is set aside so far as plot No. 1411 is concerned and the suit is decreed accordingly. The appeal is partly decreed. The appeal as to plot No. 979 is dismissed. In view of the circumstances of this case, each party will bear its own costs.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, in Civil Appeal No. 28 of 1919, dated the 26th June 1919.

Mr. K. V. Deoskar, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. P. Tiwari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There is no force in the first two grounds of appeal. The defendant collected the rent from the four tenants in question in his capacity as lambardar. The defendant, admittedly, collected the plaintiff's share as well as his own. He nowhere pleaded that he did not act in the capacity of lambardar. He also nowhere pleaded that the plaintiffs were the sole landlords of a 2-annas share of the fields of these tenants and he did not plead that the plaintiffs were estopped from demanding from him the excess collections made. There is no ground on the record differentiating the collections in respect of these four tenants from the collections made from other tenants. These grounds of appeal must, therefore, fail.

SHEO KUMAR LAL v. RAMPHAL DASS.

The third and fourth grounds of appeal ignore the fact that the suit is one for accounts and that the accounts were properly made out up to the date of the decree.

As regards the fifth ground of appeal, which relates to the claim for the pay of a Mukadam Gomastha, it would appear from the record that there is no Mukadam Gomastha properly so-called. There is a private servant appointed by the lambardar, who is a non resident, to do his work for him. He cannot charge his co-sharer with the wages of this servant without previously coming to some agreement with the co-sharer. No authority has been cited in support of the appellant's contention. The facts appear to be quite different from those in Tatya v. Dhundiraj (1).

The last two grounds of appeal are not pressed.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 52—Landlord and tenant—Enhancement of rent, suit for—Excess area, proof of—Rent paid according to area, effect of.

In a suit for enhancement of rent on the ground of excess area, clause (5) of section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act relieves the landlord from the necessity of proving the particular land as being the land held by the tenant in excess of the area originally held by him. Under that clause the landlord is only required to prove the area originally held by the tenant and the excess subsequently found, provided the standard of measurement is the same throughout. [p. 960, col. 2; p. 961, col. 1.]

Where a consolidated jama is paid for a particular holding, the subsequent detection of excess area would not entitle the landlord to an increase of rent. If, on the other hand, the rent is paid according to the area, whether that area is arrived at in the beginning by measurement or not, the subsequent detection of any change in the area would entail a corresponding alteration in the rental, whether it be a reduction in favour of the tenant or an enhancement in favour of the landlord [p. 960, col 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Shahabad, in First Appeal No. 426 of 1918, dated the 9th August 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, Buxar, in First Suit No. 426 of 1917, dated the 28th October 1918.

Mr. Shambhu Charan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against the judgment of the District Judge of Shahabad decreeing the claim of the plaintiffs for the assessment of additional rent under section 52 (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the excess area held by the defendant.

The defendant purchased the holdings of two tenants sometime in 1864-65. The Jama Wasil Baki of 1863 64 filed by the plaintiffs (Exhibits 1 and 1-A) show that the total area purchased by his vendors was 30 bighas at a total rental of Rs. 75-11-6. The former shows 14 bighas 5 kathas and the latter 15 bighas 12 kathas. In both, the rate of rent is shown to be Rs. 2-8-0.

The defendant has filed rent receipts. Exhibits A-22 to A 49 are plain receipts and do not show area. Exhibits A to A 21 are printed receipts according to the form prescribed in the Bengal Tenancy Act for the years 1295 to 1316 with certain gaps, and they show an area of 30 bighas with a rental of Rs. 74, after a deduction of Re. 1 as muafi.

The defendant admits that his rental is Rs. 74 excluding cesses. The Survey has recorded the area to be 37-1/5 bighas with a rental of Rs. 76. The status of the defendant was recorded in the Survey as that of a tenant at fixed rate.

In the present suit the plaintiffs made two prayers: (1) that the status of the defendant was wrongly recorded in the Survey and should have been that of an occupancy of Qaimi tenant; and (2) that the defendant has by encroachment increased his area from 30 bighas, which was originally held, to 37 bighas odd as found by the recent Survey. The Munsif decided both these points against the plaintiffs and dismissed the suit.

SHEO KUMAR LAL v. RAMPHAL DASS.

The learned District Judge on appeal upheld the decision of the Munsif on the first point, namely, that the tenant was at fixed rate, but disagreed with him as regards the second point. He held that the area now found by the Survey measurement is in excess of the area for which the defendant has been paying rent and that the standard of measurement by which the defendant or his predecessor came into possession of the land and that of the Cadastral Survey was the same, namely, a rod of $5\frac{1}{2}$ cubits. After the Survey Record of Rights the plaintiffs thought that the defendant had encroached upon the plaintiffs' zerait land in Survey Plots Nos. 170, 168, 169 and 172. They accordingly brought a suit for ejecting the defendant from those plots. This suit was dismissed upon the ground that those plots were included in the kebalas of the defendant of 1864 and 1865, and that they were not the zerait of the plaintiffs. They then brought a rent suit for recovery of rent including those plots, and now they have brought the present suit for assessment of additional rent on the excess area found to be in possession of the defendant. In paragraph 8 of the plaint they explain how this excess has occurred and repeat their story that it was due to encroachment by the defendant over the aforesaid plots. In the relief actually prayed for in the plaint, the case of the plaintiffs is a simple case of additional rent for the excess area. The learned Judge, therefore, treated the plaintiffs' case as such. According to the Judge it is immaterial, and all that is necessary in a case of this kind is to find out what was the area originally held by the defendant and what excess, if any, has since then occurred in his holding and whether he has been paying rent for the excess area or not. One of the plaintiffs examined himself and proved that the lands in the village were originally settled by measurement and the standard of measurement was $5\frac{1}{2}$ cubits, the same as in the present Survey, and that the defendant's predecessor had held 30 bighas according to that measurement.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant has repeated the objection to the evidence of the plaintiff on the ground that he, in his cross-examination, disclaimed all personal knowledge of the standard of measurement at the time of the original settlement of the village lands. The Court below has considered this objection and has accepted the plaintiffs' evidence as showing that the standard was $5\frac{1}{2}$ cubits, a rod, and as it appeared to him to be consistent with the common standard of measurement in that area, and also because there was no rebutting evidence on the defendant's side. From the evidence on the record, the Court was competent to accept the evidence that the standard of measuremnt is the same in the locality as adopted by the Survey authorities. If that is so, certainly the defendant is holding more land than what was comprised within the holding of his predecessor or himself. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the land held by the defendant was 30 bighas whether his predecessor obtained this area by actual settlement or by possession subsequently recognised by the landlord.

The only question, in the circumstances of this case, is whether the defendant was paying a consolidated jama for his holding or was paying rent in accordance with the area; so that if the latter changed, his rental would also change. The subject has been one of great difficulty and has led to divergence of opinion, but the principle running through all the cases cited to me on the point is that, when a consolidated jama for a particular holding is paid, the subsequent detection of the excess area would not entitle a landlord to an increase of rent. If, on the other hand, the rent is paid according to the area, whether that area is arrived at in the beginning by measurement or not, the subsequent detection of any change in the area would entail the corresponding alteration in the rental whether it be a reduction in favour of the tenant or an enhancement in favour of the landlord. The interpretation put by the decision in the case of Gouri Pattra v. H. R. Reily (1) under section 52 of the Act was considered to be inequitable and was soon rectified by the addition of clause (5) to section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Clause (5), therefore, relieved the landlord of the necessity of proving the particular land as being the land held by a tenant in excess of his original holding. The landlord is now only required to prove the area originally held and the excess subsequently, found provided that the standard of measurement is the same throughout. I would not enter into a detailed discussion of the cases cited to me. They indicate the views expressed on the subject at different times: Rajkumar Pratap Sahoy v. Ram Lal Singh (2), Lakhi Narain Sarongi v. Sri Ram Chandra (3), Gouri Pattra v. H. R. Reily (1), Dhrupad Chandra Koley v. Harinath Singha Roy (4) and last, and not the least, the case of this Court reported as Kesho Prasad Singh v. Tribhuan (5). By no means, the decisions have been exhaustive, for section 52 itself has been held to be not exhaustive. The principles laid therein have to be applied to the varying circumstances of each case. I think that the present case is similar in many respects to the aforesaid case, reported as Kesho Prasad Singh v. Tribhuan (5), though not exactly the same, and the principle of that case might well be extended to the present one. I think the facts proved in this case are sufficient to entitle the landlords to claim enhancement for the excess area. Lands in villages were seldom used to be settled by measurement, and, I venture to think, it will not always be so settled. Often, they are settled by indicating a particular quantity of land or area which the tenant is to hold at a rental either expressed by means of rate of rent or in lump. In such case, the intention of the parties is to settle the area, and, if it be satisfactorily proved that the area actually held is different from what it was originally settled, certainly, the rent must be varied accordingly. The presumption of this principle has been given by the Court below to the plaintiffs, wherein it distinctly says, "ordinarily rent is assessed according to the area which the raiyat is understood to hold; and I think that it should be assumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that this rent was settled in that way." I have no hesitation in accepting this view as the correct one. No question of settlement by measurement, therefore, at the inception arose, though the evidence of the plaintiffs is that the land in the village was originally settled by measurement. I do not, therefore, think that a consolidated jama was fixed irrespective of the area held by the tenant in the present case.

The result is, that the tenant is in possession of the excess area for which he has not been paying rent. In justice and equity, the landlords are entitled to demand from him an additional rent, calculated at the average rate of rent paid on all the lands of the holding.

It may not be out of place to mention here that the jama wasil baki (Exhibits 1 and 1-A) mentioned the rate to be Rs. 2-8-0 and if that document be accepted as true, then the question of settlement at a consolidated jama does not arise. The Court below, however, does not think very much of this document, and says that "it looks like a document which has been recently prepared in imitation of an old paper." But the rent receipts of the defendant, though not mentioning the rate, work out the rate mentioned in the aforesaid jama wasil baki.

The defendant has not produced the kebalas in the present case, although he had produced them in the former litigation. The presumption will, therefore, be that, if these documents were produced, they would go against the defendant's case. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JAIRAM v. MOTILAL.

The presentation of an application under Order XXXIII, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, for leave to sue in forma pauperis to the Judge through the Clerk of the Court is a proper presentation within the meaning of that rule It is not necessary for the applicant to place the petition in the actual hands of the Judge himself. [p. 962, col. 1.]

Application for revision against the order of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated 2nd February 1920, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 23 of 1919.

Mr G. R. Deo, for the Applicant.

Mr. V. D. Kale, for the Non-Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Jairam Teli personally presented an application for leave to sue as a pauper, accompanied by a copy of his plaint, to the Clerk of Court, in the office of the District Judge of Nagpur, on 5th April 1919. The suit was for redemption of a mortgage executed in 1383. He was instructed to appear before the Additional District Judge on 10th April 1919. On that date he appeared in Court. The Judge did not examine him at that stage, but directed notices to issue to the other party. At the next hearing the applicant and the other party were examined and were ordered to produce evidence. There were many hearings thereafter, at six of which, at least, the applicant was present in person. Finally, on 2nd February 1920, an order was passed rejecting the application on the ground, raised by the non-applicants, that the presentation on 5th April 1919 to the Clerk of Court was not such as is required by Order XXXIII, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, which contemplates presentation to the Judge himself.

The rule mentioned speaks of presentation to the "Court," and there are instances in the Code where that word cannot refer to the Judge personally, as, for example, Order VII, rule 10. There can, however, be no doubt that, under rule 2 of Order XXXIII an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis must be presented to the Judge himself, and presentation to the Clerk of Court is not sufficient. The rule speaks only of the Court, obviously with the intention of distinguishing the presentation of such an application from that of an ordinary plaint which, under Order IV, rule 1, may be presented "to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf." Further, rule 4 of Order XXXIII, which follows that prescribing personal presentation to the Court speaks of the applicant being examined by the "Court" and this can, of course, only mean the Judge.

It is, however, equally clear that it is not necessary for the applicant to place his petition in the actual hands of the Judge himself. He would, naturally and ordinarily, give it to some official of the Court, the Reader or even a Chaprasi, and the Reader would either put him before the Judge and his petition in the Judge's hands at once, or instruct him to come at some more convenient time, a few minutes, or hours, or even days, later. When at that later time the Reader puts the petition in the Judge's hands and the petitioner stands before him, we have undoubtedly a proper presentation of the petition to the Judge by the applicant in person, such as is contemplated by Order XXXIII, rule 2, and, if this is done by the Clerk of Court, instead of the Reader, surely the presentation is more rather than less proper.

We may take a more extreme case. Suppose that Jairam had handed his petition on 5th April 1919 to some friend of his and asked him to put it before the Judge to whom it ought to go, and the friend had told him to be at the Additional District Judge's Court on 10th April 1919 and had then sent the petition by the hand of a servant, so that it lay on the Judge's table on that day at the time that Jairam stood before him. This would, certainly, be a presentation to the Judge by Jairam in person. It would, of course, be a presentation on the 0th and not on the 5th for all purposes, including that of the calculation of the period of limitation, but that question does not arise here as Jairam still had nearly 40 years ahead of him in which to file his suit.

The following observations of Piggott and Walsh, JJ., in Raman Lalji v. Gokul Nathji (1), are pertinent in this case:—

"It is the first Court's business to see that its own rules are complied with, and, in our view, it is not right that the first Court should leave the investigation of that question to the Appellate Court. If a defect is brought to its notice by its own officer—and it is the duty of an officer of the Court, if there is any defect in procedure or in the frame of the suit or in similar matters, to draw the attention of the Judge to the fact—or by the parties, or one of them, the Judge ought to put the defaulting party on terms to correct the defect. If the defaulting party, on the defect being pointed out to him, declines to obey the Court's order to correct it, obviously, he has only himself to thank for any penalty which may ensue. But, in our view, a Court ought not to dismiss a suit without, at any rate, giving the defaulting party an opportunity of correcting the defect in procedure, if there be any. And the reported cases show that Courts of Appeal have been driven to indulge in refinements in order to prevent the ends of justice being defeated on a point of this kind. It is not in the interests of the litigants themselves that a Court should be astute to defeat a claim, not on a consideration of the merits, but on some technical point of procedure. There is no defect in procedure which anybody is capable of making which cannot, as a rule, be amended and compensated for by an order as to costs."

In this case it seems to us that a very considerable amount of astuteness was employed in defeating a claim which a very small amount of common sense would have shown to be perfectly good, and that, without the correction of any defect in procedure or any indulgence in refinements. Even if the applicant had not been present at any one of the hearings (and any one of his appearances could, as has been shown, have been taken as a sufficient presentation) he should have been given an opportunity of making a proper presentation after the defect in procedure had been brought to the notice of the Court. We hold that the presentation of the appeal by Jairam on 10th April 1919 was a proper presentation under Order XXXIII, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. The order rejecting that application as not properly presented is set aside, and the case will be sent back to the lower Court for further hearing. Costs in this Court, in which Rs. 15 will be included as Pleader's fee, will follow the result.

The "Asura" form of marriage is not illegal or immoral, and money paid to the parents of the bride does not constitute unlawful consideration. [p. 965, col. 1.]

Where upon the dismissal of a suit by a mortgagee for foreclosure on the basis of a mortgage by conditional sale which was resisted by the sons of the mortgagor on the ground that the property mortgaged was ancestral joint family property and that there was no legal necessity for the loan taken, the mortgagee brought another suit for a simple money decree:

Held, (1) that whether or not there was a personal covenant in the bond, the mortgagee was entitled to relief under section 65 of the Contract Act, and that his suit must, therefore, succeed; [p. 964, col. 1.]

(2) that the contract having become void by reason of the defence of the sons, it must be held that there was failure of consideration from the date of the decree in the foreclosure suit, which should be taken as the starting point of limitation. [p. 964, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 19th May 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Gonda, dated the 23rd December 1918.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been argued ex parte, there being no appearance on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents. However, after hearing the arguments put forward by the learned Counsel on behalf of the appellants I think the appeal must fail. I consider that the judgment of the Court below should be affirmed.

The facts are that, on the 12th of June 1908, a mortgage by conditional sale was executed by one Durga Prasad, who was the father of the present defendants appellants. The mortgagee was one Ganga Ram, who was a brother of the plaintiff No. 1 and the father of the plaintiff No. 2. The principal sum was Rs. 200 and interest was provided for at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum compoundable with yearly rests. The term of the mortgage was two years.

The mortgagee brought a suit for foreclosure on the basis of this deed. The claim was resisted by the sons of the mortgagor, and the suit was dismissed on the 1st of July 1918 on the ground that the property mortgaged was ancestral joint family property and that there was no legal necessity for the loan which was taken. The plaintiffs, therefore, brought the present suit on the 7th of August 1918 and asked for a simple money decree. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim on the ground that it was time-barred. The lower Appellate Court has decreed the claim, holding that the suit was within time.

It has been argued here, in the first place, that no suit for a simple money-decree was maintainable, on the ground that the mortgage, being a mortgage by conditional sale, there was no personal covenant on the part of the mortgagor to pay. The learned Judge of the Court below, however, has relied upon section 65 of the Indian Contract Act, and held that, whether or not there was a personal covenant in the bond, the mortgagee is, under section 65, entitled to compensation, the measure of the compensation being the sum which was advanced, together with interest at the contract rate.

It is not necessary for me to touch upon another question which was raised in the Court below regarding the application of section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act to this case. I am satisfied that the Court below was right in holding that, under section 65 of the Contract Act, the plaintiffs were entitled to relief. To begin with, my view is that the mortgage which was executed by the father of these defendants appellants was not a void but only a voidable transaction. There is authority for this proposition in a case reported as Bishumbhar Dayal v. Parshadi Lal (1), in which it was held by Chamier, J., that a mortgage by one member of a joint Hindu family of property belonging to the family is not void altogether but is voidable at the instance of the persons whose rights are invaded by it. I may also refer to what is said by their Lordships in a case reported as Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (2), in which, dealing with a sale which had been executed by one member of a joint family their Lordships observed that they were inclined to think that the sale was not necessarily void but was voidable only if objections were taken to it by the other members of the joint family. I have been referred to a decision of a Judge of this Court, [Zakir Husain v. Bhagwan Das, First Civil Appeal No. 121 of 1918], in which it would seem an opposite view was taken. I need only say that I do not agree with the judgment of the learned Judge who decided that case, and I think the authority of their Lordships of the Privy Council is all that is necessary to refer to for the purpose of confirming my view of the law.

We have it, then, that this mortgage, which was a voidable transaction, was entered into by the father of the defendants appellants. The contract became void by reason of the defence put forward by the sons in the foreclosure suit and, consequently, from the date of the decree in the foreclosure suit, it must be held that there was a failure of consideration. It is admitted that the suit is within time if the date of the decree in the foreclosure case is taken as the starting point for limitation.

I may mention that another point was sought to be made by the learned Counsel for the appellant. He argued that the contract was void ab initio on the ground that the consideration was illegal. It seems that the principal money taken under the mortgage was borrowed for the purpose of payment to the father of a girl who was married to one of the present defendants. There is, however, no definite legal opinion that this form of Hindu marriage, which in the books is called the "Asura" form, is illegal or immoral. There is, indeed, some authority for this view in decisions of the Bombay High Court, but the High Court of Allahabad, following the opinion of the Madras High Court, has held that this form of marriage is still recognised as valid and that money which is paid to the parents of a bride is not paid as upon an unlawful consideration [cf. Baldeo Sahai v. Jumna Kunwar (3)].

I hold that the decision of the Court below is correct. The appeal fails and is dismissed.

Court-fees—Declaratory suit that adoption did not take place, nature of—Adoption affecting title to property—Court-fee, payable.

A suit for a declaration that an adoption did not take place, is, for the purpose of Court-fees, one to declare an adoption invalid, and, where the adoption affects title to immoveable property, the Court-fee payable on the suit is an ad valorem fee calculated on the value of the property.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Daryapur, decided on the 14th March 1919.

Mr. S. C. Dutt Choudhary, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. K. Barlinge, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In a suit for declaration that an adoption is valid or invalid, if it affects a title to property, the Court fee payable is on the value of the property title to which is affected: vide Civil Circular II-8 which re-produces Notification No. 164, dated the 28th September 1911, under section 9 of the Suits Valuation Act: see also First Appeal No. 66 of 1916. [Ganpatrao v. Laxmi Bai (1)]. The present suit is for a declaration that the defendant No 1 was never adopted by the plaintiff's father. The question is, can it be said to be one of the kinds referred to in the Circular; or, in other words, can it be called a suit for a declaration that an adoption is invalid? In my opinion, it can. An adoption which never took place cannot but be invalid. Court fee in this case must, therefore, be paid on the value of the property, Rs. 7,000, as stated in paragraph 7 of the plaint.

The appellant must pay, within one month, the difference between the Court-fee he has actually paid and the Court-fee on Rs. 7,000 on the plaint as well as the memorandum of appeal in this Court, viz., a total of Rs. 690. The appeal will be stayed pending until such payment.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint—Appellate Court, powers of, to allow amendment—Amendment not altering nature of suit.

KHAJA MIRJA v. VITHOBA.

Plaintiff sued for possession by pre-emption of certain land transferred under an adhlapi tenure. The Court of first instance found in favour of the plaintiff on all the issues, but dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had not stated in the plaint that he was prepared to perform all the conditions attaching to the adhlapi tenure. An application for amendment of the plaint was rejected as having been made too late. On appeal, the District Judge allowed the amendment:

Held, (1) that the Appellate Court had ample power to allow an amendment which did not offend against any provision of the law;

(2) that the amendment allowed in the present case did not alter the nature of the suit and that it was a fit case in which amendment ought to have been allowed.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhang, at Sargodha, dated the 23rd-24th January 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Class, Jhang, dated the 30th August 1918.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Appellants.

Pir Taj-ud-Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only plea urged before me in this second appeal is that the lower Appellate Court ought not to have allowed the amendment of the plaint at the stage of an appeal. The suit was one for pre-emption. The land in dispute had been transferred under what is known in this province as an adhlapi tenure. Rs. 150 was paid by the transferee to the grantors as nazrana. The plaintiff claimed a superior right of pre-emption on the ground that he was an agnate of the transferor and that the right of pre emption attached to transfers by way of adhlapi tenure also. Upon all the issues raised in the Court of first instance on the pleadings of the parties, the decision was in favour of the plaintiff; but the Court of first instance, relying on Mul Chand v. Mansa Ram (1), dismissed the suit upon the ground that the plaintiff had not stated in the plaint that he was prepared to perform all the conditions on which the adhlapi tenure had been created. It appears that an application for the amendment of the plaint was made to the Court but it was rejected on the ground that it was made too late and was presented after the judgment had been pronounced. But an examination of the petition shows that there was a clear statement made therein that an oral request had been made to the Court to allow an amendment before the decision of the case. Now, it is not denied that an Appellate Court has got ample powers to allow an amendment which does not offend against any provision of the law. It is clear that the amendment allowed in this case did not change the nature of the suit. The plea was of a highly technical nature and it was a fit case in which an amendment ought to have been allowed. It is not alleged that Sadde Khan, the appellant, has in any way suffered by the allowance of this amendment. The right of the plaintiff to pre-empt is not denied. The full amount of the nazrana paid by Sadde Khan, i. e., Rs. 150, has been allowed by the decree. Having regard to the above circumstances, I am decidedly of opinion that the course adopted by the lower Appellate Court was proper.

Accordingly, I dismiss the second appeal with costs.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 92 (2)—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Plea, determination of—Duty of Court.

In deciding whether the jurisdiction of a Civil Court is barred under proviso 2 to section 92 of the C. P. Tenancy Act, the Court must take into account the true position of the defendant, as disclosed by all the pleadings, if the defendant takes up a position for the purpose of taking advantage of the bar created by the 2nd proviso to section 92, the Court must determine whether that proviso has any application.

Civil revision of the decree of the Additional Senior Munsif, Nagpur, dated the 31st July 1919, in Civil Suit No. 140 of 1918.

Mr. A. N. Chorghade, for the Applicant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—So far as the construction of the plaint is concerned, this suit for possession must be held to be laid substantially against defendant and who is said to be in possession. Defendant No 2 is mentioned merely as a person through whom defendant No. 1 obstructed and dispossessed plaintiff and not as an independent ejector or as a co ejector. The plaintiff alleged that he was the tenant of the field in dispute. Defendant No. 1 alleged that he was the Malguzar and the plaintiff admitted that fact. Section 92 of the Tenancy Act, therefore, applies and proviso 2 bars recovery of possession by the plaintiff under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. But, it is argued by the plaintiff's Pleader, that the plaintiff makes no reference to the status of the defendant No. 1 as landlord but only alleges him to be a trespasser and, as the venue in a case is to be determined by the allegations in the plaint, the lower Court was bound to ignore the status of defendant No. 1. In fact, he goes to the length of arguing that it is open to the plaintiff in a case of ejectment of a tenant by a landlord to compel jurisdiction in the Civi Court in spite of the provisions of section 92 by suppressing in the plaintiff the true relationship of the parties. No authority is cited for this proposition.

It seems to me that the Court must take no notice of the true position of the defendant as appearing from all the pleadings, and if, in any case, the defendant sets up his position for the purpose of taking advantage of the bar of the 2nd proviso to section 92, the Court must determine it for the purpose of deciding whether that proviso applies.

It is clear from the pleadings that the defendant is the landlord and has ejected the plaintiff, who is a tenant, from his holding and the latter is suing to recover possession of a tenancy. The case clearly falls within section 92, and proviso 2 applies. The fact that the plaintiff calls defendant No. 1 a trespasser does not alter the real nature of the case.

I hold that the Court below had no jurisdiction to decree recovery of possession by the plaintiff under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The decree of the lower Court is set aside. The plaintiff's suit fails and is dismissed throughout.

Decree set aside.

Easement—Right to drop water from eaves—Roof of dominant tenement raised, effect of—Water let down through pipes—Extinguishment of easement.

Where the owner of a dominant tenement had the right to let the rain water from the roof of his house drop from the eaves on to the roof of the servient tenement from a distance of 7 feet and, subsequently, he raised the height of his roof to about 21 feet from the roof of the servient tenement and, instead of allowing the water to drop from the eaves he poured it down through pipes:

Held, that the burden on the servient tenement had increased and that, therefore, the easement was extinguished. [p. 969, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad (Arrah).

Messrs. L. N. Singh and Siveswar Dayal, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. P. Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in the suit out of which this appeal arises had a tiled hut contiguous to the plaintiff's house. The western slope of the dochhapra roof of the defendant overhung the plaintiff's roof for a length of about 25 feet and was about 7 or 8 feet above the plaintiff's roof. The defendant had acquired a right of easement to let the water falling on his western roof, drip off on to the plaintiff's roof.

Recently, the defendant converted the tiled hut into a Pucca house and raised the height of the house and made a Pucca roof thereon. From this roof, on the western side, he intended to release the water accumulating on the roof by pipes and to place three pipes on the west side and three pipes on the east; the height of the east pipes above the plaintiff's roof was about 21 feet.

The plaintiff sought for a declaration that the defendant had no right to allow the water to fall from his roof through those three pipes.

It having been found by both the lower Courts that the defendants had acquired an easement to allow the water to fall from the roof of the tiled hut on to the plaintiff's roof, the only question that arises is, whether, by increasing the height of his roof and by allowing the water to flow only through three pipes instead of down the whole surface of the roof, the defendant has increased the burden on the servient tenement and has, thus, lost the right of easement which he formerly enjoyed.

The Munsif found that the right was extinguished, as the defendant had changed the mode of enjoyment in a way to aggravate the servitude. He decreed the plaintiff's suit and gave the relief asked for.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge has examined the question whether the increased height and the placing of three pipes would increase the burden of the servient tenement. He found that the volume of water falling on the roof of the plaintiff's house would be no greater than it was before, and he also found that the fact that the water poured through the three pipes instead of dripping along the whole edge of the eaves would not make the burden more onerous; but he seems to have concluded that the increase in height, together with the change effected by the pipes, would have a cumulative effect and occasion a reasonable and probable apprehension of some damage to the roof of the plaintiff's house. He came to no definite finding that the burden on the servient tenement has been increased; but he suggested that any injury would be averted if the pipes from the roof were lengthened downward so as to end at only $7\frac{1}{2}$ feet from the surface of the plaintiff's roof. He allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit, provided that the defendant within a month furnished three long pipes running down to the surface of the roof of the plaintiff's house.

If the burden on the servient tenement was increased by the change effected by the defendant, the easement acquired by the defendant would be extinguished: and the effect of the learned Subordinate Judge's decision really is, that the easement has been extinguished, but may be revived by complying with the suggestions made by the learned Subordinate Judge. If it is found, as a fact, that the burden on the servient tenement was increased, it must be held that the easement has been extinguished; and I have only to decide whether, on the facts found, the burden was increased. In my mind, there can be no doubt that the drop of water from a height of 21 feet must cause more damage than a drop of water from $7\frac{1}{2}$ feet; also, the effect of the pouring of water through three pipes on a roof must cause more damage to a portion of the roof on which the water falls than the dripping of water from all along the edge of the eaves along the whole roof of the plaintiff's house. There can be no doubt that the concentrated volume of water through the pipes from the increased height would cause a greater burden on the servient tenement, in that the water would cause more damage to the roof.

It has been contended that the case of Harvey v. Walters (1) would show that the mere increase in height of the building could not be taken to be an additional burthen on the servient tenement in a case like the present, but there the increase in height was inappreciable, it was only four courses of bricks, and of course that increase would make, practically, no difference in the amount of damage caused.

The case of Damodar Das v. Tilak Chand (2) has facts very similar to the present one. There, a Tathi house was changed into a three-storied Pucca house and five spouts were placed on the roof to discharge water on the land. It was held that the burden on the servient tenement was considerably increased.

The case of Suresh Chandra Biswas v.

(2) 30 Ind. Cas, 941; 13 A, L. J. 791,

Jogendra Nath Sen (3) also supports the argument that, in this case, the burden was increased. There, a hut was replaced by a two-storied building and the water was made to fall 22 feet, while before it had only fallen 8 feet.

I must hold that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration that the burden on the servient tenement had been increased by the changes effected by the defendant, and that, therefore, the easement enjoyed by the defendant previously was extinguished; and, having been extinguished, it cannot be revived by any change which the defendant may now make.

Accordingly, the appeal is allowed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court as well as in the lower Appellate Court.

II, r. 2—Suit based on provisions of document—Suit, subsequent, based on same document, whether maintainable.*

P. had an agreement in his favour for sale of certain mica mines and, in pursuance thereof, a deed of sale was executed but not registered as he could not find the entire amount of the consideration money. He then entered into negotiations with D, with respect to the mines and two letters were exchanged between the parties on 4th February 1907. P. in his letter to D. said that he was unable to work the business and agreed that D. should buy the property and carry on the business and undertook to get a conveyance in his favour, and stipulated that D. should bear all the expenses, carry on the business and pay P. a 2-anna share out of the profits, and concluded by saying that, as soon as D. paid the owner of the property, he should execute a Kararnama embodying these conditions D, in his letter to P., referred to the terms as to the agreement between the parties, and added that if he failed to execute the Kararnama by a certain date he would give up all his rights in the property under these documents. Thereafter there was a conveyance of the property in favour of D. by the owner and P, in which it was recited that the transaction between P. and the owner had fallen through. The Kararnama was not executed. So P. in 1910 instituted a suit claiming that he was the sole owner of the mines. In his written statement D claimed that he was the owner absolute of the property; that P. had no rights in the business either as owner or as partner, and that as P. had failed to carry out the arrangement as to the Kararnama he had lost his 2-anna share. P. adduced no evidence and failed to appear, whereupon the suit was dismissed. P. then applied for restoration and for permission to amend the plaint by adding a prayer in the alternative that D. be directed to execute the Kararnama. The suit was restored, but the amendment was refused. In 1914 P. withdrew the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. In 91 P. instituted the present suit for a declaration that he was a partner with D. for accounts and for his share of the profits:—

Held, 1) that there was a partnership created between the parties on 4th February 1907, and that the constitution of that partnership was not made conditional or contingent on the execution of the Kararnama; [p. 971, col. 2; p. 972, col. 2]

2) that the partnership was dissolved as the effect of the repudiation contained in the pleadings of the parties in the suit of 910; [p 974, col. 1.]

(3) that the present suit, having been brought more than six years after the dissolution of the partnership, it was barred under Article 120, Schedule I to the Limitation Act; [p. 974, col. 2; p 975, col. 1.]

(4) that the present suit was not maintainable by virtue of Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code as P's cause of action in both the suit of 1910 and the present suit, was based on the contract of partnership contained in the letters of 4th February 1907, and as in the previous suit the relief claimed by him was that his right to the property might be established it was not now open to him to claim relief on the basis that he was a partner with D. and entitled to a 2-anna share. [p. 975, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Nellore, in Original Suit No. 34 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar (with him Messrs. K. Balasubramanya Aiyar and K. Krishnaswami Aiyangar), for the Appellant.—The lower Court erred in holding that the plaintiff's suit was barred. The plaintiff did not acknowledge that the defendant was a partner and there could be no dissolution of partnership unless there was in the first place an acknowledgment of it and that was followed by an intimation that the partnership was not to continue. In the previous suit the plaintiff repudiated the partnership and alleged that he was the absolute owner of the mines. See observations in Syers v. Syers (1) and Parsons v. Haywards (2).

In any event, this suit is not governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act. Either Article 106, 115 or 131 applies and the suit is not, applying any of those articles, barred. Here no time was fixed for the duration of the partnership. If the contract of partnership subsisted and it could not be determined by efflux of time the appropriate article is Article 106.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar (Advocate-General) (with him Mr. S. Varadachariar), for the Respondents.—There was a complete dissolution of the partnership evidenced by the pleadings put in by the parties in the suit of 1910. Each party claimed to be the absolute owner of the mines as the terms of the partnership contained in the correspondence was not reduced to a deed of partnership. That is to say, the parties put an end to the contract. The partnership having been dissolved in 1910, the present suit brought more than six years after that date is barred. In the prior suit the plaintiff offered to amend his plaint by adding a prayer for his share in the partnership and when that was disallowed he withdrew the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit. No set terms are necessary to indicate a dissolution of partnership. Syers v. Syers (1) relied on by the other side, though it proceeded on the peculiar facts of that case, laid down the general proposition that repudiation of a partnership may be inferred from expressions used which would indicate the will of the parties against the continuance of the partnership. See also Pearce v. Lindsay (3).

The Article governing the case is the residuary Article 120 of the Limitation Act. Article 106 will not apply as it does not deal with cases of exclusion of a partner. It applies to suits for account and share of a dissolved partnership. The present suit is for declaration of the plaintiff's rights as a partner. It is not a suit for account or even for dissolution. Article 131 will not apply as there are no periodically recurring rights here. The plaintiff can ask for the available reliefs only once and not at stated periods. There are no successive breaches here to attract the operation of Article 115.

The suit is also barred under Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff should have included all these reliefs in the previous suit.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The plaintiff had an agreement in his favour for sale of certain mica mines, the property of certain Marwaris of this town. The mines are situated in the District of Nellore. It appears that, in pursuance of that agreement, a deed of sale was executed, but it was not registered as the plaintiff was unable to find the entire amount of the consideration for it. Rs. 450, however, part of the consideration money, was recovered from him by a suit in the Small Cause Court. Subsequently, the plaintiff entered into negotiations with the 1st defendant, the 1st respondent in this appeal, with respect to the mines. I may mention that part of the property was free-hold and part of it was lease-hold. The term of the lease-hold expired on 31st October 1907. The contract between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant is embodied in two letters, Exhibits C and C1, which were exchanged between the parties on 4th February 1907, and the construction of those letters is one of the important questions for consideration in this suit. Thereafter, there was a conveyance of the property in the name of the 1st defendant, by the owner of the property and the plaintiff. The former has been described as the first vendor and the latter as the second vendor. The property is conveyed to the 1st defendant for Rs. 1,250 and the document recites that the transaction between the plaintiff and the owner of the mines, fell through. So far as the deed of sale is concerned, there can be no doubt that it purports to be entirely in favour of the 1st defendant, the consideration being Rs. 1,250. By the terms of this deed the plaintiff had no sort of interest in the property; but Exhibit I, i. e., the sale-deed, was undoubtedly executed in pursuance of the contract between the parties as contained in Exhibits C and C1, the deed of sale having been executed on 28th February 1907, that is, 24 days after Exhibits C and C1.

The first question which arises is, whether Exhibits C and C1 constituted a partnership between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant from 4th February 1907, or, at least, from the date of Exhibit I, by which the 1st defendant obtained a conveyance of the property and was thus in a position to work the mines.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that there was no partnership created by Exhibits C and C1; but what those documents provided was that partnership in respect of the mines was to become operative only from the date when the Kararnama mentioned therein was executed according to the terms of those documents. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the time mentioned, within which the Kararnama was to be executed, was not intended by the parties to be of the essence of the contract, and no argument has been addressed to us to the contrary by the learned Vakil for the defendants. Exhibit C says that, as the plaintiff found it difficult to carry on the business, he agreed that the 1st defendant should buy the property and carry on business there crediting the sum of Rs. 450 which had been recovered from the plaintiff by the owner of the mines by a decree of the Small Cause Court, in the company's accounts or against the company, meaning by company the partnership. The plaintiff undertakes to get a conveyance in favour of the 1st defendant, and then proceeds to stipulate that the 1st defendant should bear all the expenses of the working of the mines, carry on the business, take 14 annas in the rupee out of the profits and pay the plaintiff the balance of 2 annas. Then, the last sentence of Exhibit C is in these words: "As soon as you pay the amount due to Kundamdass Garu (the ower of the mines), i.e., as soon as you pay the amount in my presence, you shall execute Kararnama with those conditions on proper stamp paper and register the same." The letter written by the 1st defendant, Exhibit C1, refers to the terms of Exhibit C as to the agreement between the parties. But it adds: 'If this is not thus settled within the 15th of this month, I shall relinquish the same irrespective of all the conditions you executed in my favour.' That is to say, if he failed to execute the Kararnama within the time mentioned, he (1st defendant) would give up all his rights in the property under these documents. Once it is conceded that time was not intended to be the essence of the contract—and it is not suggested that the Kararnama was to embody any terms not already set out in Exhibits C and C1—it seems to me to follow that the constitution of partnership between the parties was not made conditional or contingent on the execution of the Kararnama. The Kararnama was to be simply a memorandum reducing into writing, the terms already settled between the parties. The presumption in such a case is, that the contract was not a conditional one depending on the execution of the document but that it was a complated contract, and the rights of the parties would not be postponed till the execution of the contemplated document. The learned Pleader for the respondent refers to Exhibit I as somehow or other supporting his contention. But I do not think that Exhibit I supports the defendant's case in this respect at all. I am quite prepared to read Exhibits C, C1 and I together, in order to see whether there was a completed contract or not. But the whole scheme seems to be that the defendant was to be purchaser of the properties for Rs. 1,250 and that Rs. 450 already paid by the plaintiff was to be treated on a different footing. It was for that reason that there was no mention of Rs. 450, or of the terms of partnership in Exhibit I. I do not suggest thereby that the draftsman could not have so drawn Exhibit I as to include also the terms of Exhibits C and C1 between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant in that document. I am of opinion that there was a partnership created between the parties on 4th February 1907.

The next question in this connection arises whether Rs. 450, which was paid by the plaintiff and which must be taken to be part of the consideration money that induced the owner of the mine to part with the property, was a contribution towards the capital of the business or was a loan by the plaintiff to the 1st defendant. In my opinion Rs. 450 was intended to be a loan. I think the words of Exhibit C are clear enough, for what it states is, that this sum was to be credited to the plaintiff in the company's accounts or against the company. If it was a contribution of capital, it could not be credited in his favour against the partnership. The claim of the plaintiff is that Rs. 450 was part of the capital supplied by him and, therefore, he was entitled to the property in that proportion, that is to say, in the proportion of Rs. 450 to Rs. 1,250 paid by the 1st defendant under Exhibit I. If that were so, there would have been some mention of that proportion in Exhibits C and C1. On the other hand, there is no such proportion mentioned and, so far as his share in the profits is concerned, there is an express stipulation that he is to get a 2 annas share in the rupee, that is, one-eighth of the profits. As for Rs. 450, what the parties intended was that that was to be re-paid to the plaintiff. When we look to the facts of this case this view seems to be also in accordance with what is likely to have happened. The plaintiff, plainly, was an impecunious man and it was not until a suit was filed in the Small Cause Court and a decree obtained in it that the sum of Rs. 450 was realised from him. He might well have stipulated that this sum ought to be refunded to him. He stipulated that all the expenses for working the mines should be met by the defendant. He is to get 2 annas share of the profits, apparently for his services in securing the mine to the defendant, and this finds corroboration from the evidence of the 1st defendant, who says in cross-examination that it is the custom as regards mines to give a small share in the profits to the person who procures them. To the extent, therefore, of 2-annas there cannot be any doubt that the plaintiff was a partner. This is stated in so many words in Exhibits C and C1 with reference to the sum of Rs. 450, whether it was intended to be plaintiff's share of the capital or a loan I may also refer to his statement before the District Registrar (Exhibit IV) where he says that the defendant owed him Rs. 450 and complains that he had not yet re-paid that amount to him. I shall now proceed on the basis that there was a completed contract of partnership between the parties in February 1907.

The next question is one of limitation. It is found by the Subordinate Judge that there was dissolution of partnership by reason of the proceedings in the suit instituted by the plaintiff in 1910. The plaintiff based his claim on the terms of Exhibits C and C1, that is to say, on the clause which provided that, if the partnership Kararnama was not executed and registered within 15th February 1907, the defendant would lose all rights in the property which the plaintiff had agreed should be conveyed to him. Since no Kararnama was executed on that date, the plaintiff claimed that he became the sole owner of the mine. The defendant in his written statement, on the other hand, claimed that he was the absolute owner of the property, that it was owing to the laches of the plaintiff himself that the Kararnama could not be executed in time, and that the plaintiff has no rights whatever with respect to the mines either as owner or as partner in the business. In paragraph 8 of the written statement it is stated: 'As the plaintiff failed to carry out the arrangement effected on 4th February 1907, as the partnership Kararnama was not executed as intended, the plaintiff has lost his 2 annas share also.' He also set up a subsequent arrangement which, if true, would still further support his contention. The plaintiff did not appear in the suit and adduced no evidence. The suit was, therefore, dismissed on 2nd August 1911. The suit was, however, restored on the application of the plaintiff and then he asked that he might be allowed to amend the plaint by asking for another alternative relief, namely, in case the Court held that he was not absolutely entitled to the property, that the defendant should be directed to execute the partnership Kararnama in his favour, for accounts and for 2-annas share in the profits on the basis of a partnership between him and the defendant. That amendment, however, was not allowed, but the order of the Court disallowing the amendment is not forthcoming, so we are unable to find out what the reasons were for not allowing the amendment. Then it appears that the plaintiff in 1914 applied for permission to withdraw the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit on the ground that he had been advised that the suit as framed was technically bad, apparently because the amendment sought for by him had not been allowed. Permission was granted to withdraw the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit on condition that the plaintiff paid the costs incurred by the defendant up to that date, on failure to pay the costs his suit was to stand dismissed. That order was passed on 20th January 1914. The plaintiff never paid the costs and the result was the suit stood dismissed. That is the history of the previous litigation. The question is whether, upon those facts, we can hold that the partnership was dissolved as the effect of the pleadings of the parties in that suit. The question is not quite free from difficulty, but, as the matter has been fully discussed at the Bar, I do not think any good purpose will be served by considering the matter any further. On the whole, I have come to the conclusion that there was dissolution. A number of rulings had been cited on this subject; their net effect is that no notice in any particular form is necessary to effect a dissolution of partnership at will in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary. Dissolution may be inferred from the circumstances of a case and from the conduct of the parties. The leading authority on the subject is the case of Syers v. Syers (1), where the Lord Chancellor (Lord Cairns) says: 'There is no technicality, no magic as to the mode of expression.' Similarly in Pearce v. Lindsay (3), it was held by Lord Chancellor Campbell and the Lords Justices, that the determination of an agreement of the nature of a partnership at-will might result from the animus of the parties towards each other without any formal notice. It was argued by Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, the learned Vakil for the appellant, that there can be no dissolution unless there is an acknowledgment of partnership, coupled with an expression of desire that this partnership should be terminated. In Syers v. Syers (1) the defendant alleged that the letter relied on by the plaintiff as stating the compact of partnership, only evidenced a transaction of loan thus repudiating plaintiff's claim that he was a partner. The defendant had written a letter to the plaintiff to that effect and it was held that that could not amount to dissolution. Lord Cairns states, "but when your Lordships look at that letter you find that it is a letter going entirely upon the theory of loan, offering to re-pay the money as a loan with a share of profits in lieu of interest, not taking any notice of a partnership or of any interest in assets, but, rather, bearing in opposition to the idea of a partnership. I cannot see how that letter could of itself operate as a dissolution of a partnership which was repudiated at that time." But then he goes on to add, "but the answer appears to me to stand upon a very different footing.....What it says in substance is this: 'I, the defendant, as a matter of law, dispute that there is any partnership. I say that there is a loan and nothing but a loan; but if there is a partnership—if that point is decided against me, and if this, which is a question of law, is determined in favour of my opponent, if the Court says there is a partnership—then, I submit that it was effectually determined on the 1st of September by the letter,' (which I before mentioned) 'of the 20th of August.' But if it was not terminated by that letter, there is in this answer the clearest intimation that the will of the partner, at whose will the partnership was constituted, is against any continuance of the partnership; and whether that will is expressed by a letter, or by an answer, or in any other way, is immaterial. There is no technicality, no magic as to the mode of expression." The case of Parsons v. Hayward (2) was also much relied upon by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar in support of his proposition. But I do not think that it carried the matter any further than Syers v. Syers (1). What is laid down there is, 'It is not, as has been represented to me, a statement by the defendant to the plaintiff that he acknowledged there to have been a partnership, namely, a partnership-at-will from the 31st July 1859, and that he was now desirous that that should terminate. But it is an unfounded assertion that this partnership had terminated on the 31st July 1859, and a continuous statement of the rights of him the defendant, founded upon the view taken by himself and persisted in by himself, I cannot accept this as an acknowledgment of a partnership-at-will and a termination of that partnership. I must regard it as being, what it really is, the same unfounded assertion of the final termination of the partnership relation which has been again made by the defendant in his answer, and which has been the origin of this suit.'

But it is apparent from what was held by Lord Cairns in Syers v. Syers (1), that repudiation of partnership may be inferred from expressions used in circumstances which would amount to an intimation of the will of the party that there should be no continuance of the partnership. Here both the parties contended in the proceeding in the previous suit that each of them was absolute owner of the property, and the defendant expressly stated that the plaintiff had no rights as a partner or as owner of the property. When each of them claimed to be exclusive owner of the mines, I think they must be taken to have intimated their will against any continuance of partnership ; in the language of Lord Cairns, in Pearce v. Lindsay (3), the learned Lord Chancellor and the Lord Justices inferred dissolution of partnership mainly from the absence of correspondence between the parties for a period of nearly nine years, the nature of the partnership being such as to entail correspondence for the carrying on of the business as contemplated by the contract. In this case each of the parties claimed the mines as his own exclusive property and one would be fully warranted to infer from this that, in case the claim of both the parties was unfounded, they did not, in any event, intend to continue in partnership. In both Syers v. Syers (1) and Parsons v. Hayward (2), the repudiation of patnership was by only one of the parties, the other party insisting throughout that he was a partner. That circumstance is enough to distinguish the present case from the facts of those cases. But I think this case is covered by the principle enunciated by Lord Cairns in Syers v. Syers (1), that dissolution of a partnership at will will be inferred from the date when the will of one of the partners is shown to be against the continuance of the partnership. In that view, the suit will be barred by limitation.

It was also argued by the learned Vakil for the respondent that, even if there was no dissolution, the suit will be barred, inasmuch as the plaintiff was excluded from partnership from at least 1910, that is, more than six years before the present suit. He contends that Article 120 of the Limitation Act would apply. I think this contention also is well founded. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar has very strenuously argued that Article 106 applies or 131 or 115. I do not think Article 106 can apply to the facts of the case, for it is not an Article which deals with cases of exclusion of a partner. It applies to suits for an account and a share of the profits of a dissolved partnership, the time running from the date of the dissolution. The main object of the present suit is the establishment of the plaintiff's right as a partner, inasmuch as those rights had been denied by the defendant. He does not even ask for a dissolution, although the Court might decree dissolution if his claim was well founded and the suit was in time. Any way, it is not an ordinary suit for an account on the basis of a dissolved partnership. Article 131 deals with suits to establish a periodically recurring right. The time from which the period begins to run is when the plaintiff is first refused the right of enjoyment. It is difficult to see how the present case can be said to be a case of periodically recurring right. The plaintiff is a partner ; his right is to ask for dissolution and accounts. He is not entitled to ask for these reliefs at stated periods. There is only one remedy to which he is entitled, that is, to ask for accounts and for a decree for his share of the profits. The same objections would apply to the application of Article 115. There is no case of successive breaches here. The argument of Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar is that, if the contract of partnership was subsisting and it could not become extinguished by efflux of time—then it is a suit covered by Article 106. If that argument was sound, then a person claiming to be a partner in a concern might take no step whatever for years, and practically evade limitation altogether. This is certainly inconsistent with the scheme of the Limitation Act which provides a general residuary Article for all suits not covered by a specific Article. That is to say, the Indian Legislature has laid down a limit of time for all suits. There is no specific provision for a suit like this where a person claiming to be a partner, and whose rights have been repudiated by the defendant seeks to establish his right as a partner and asks for other consequential reliefs. I hold, therefore, that Article 120 would apply to this case if there was no dissolution, and the suit would be barred as more than six years have elapsed from the date on which the defendant denied the rights of the plaintiff. This view, I may mention, is supported by a ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Dwarka Das Karnani v. Chuni Lal Daga (4).

I am also of opinion that the plaintiffs' present suit fails by virtue of Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, corresponding to section 43 of the old Civil Procedure Code. It is not necessary to discuss the rulings, which are numerous, on the question as to what constitutes 'cause of action.' That is to be determined with reference to the facts which gave rise to the previous suit, the scope of that suit and the reliefs that might then have been claimed. The cause of action in the present case is based on the contract of partnership as contained in Exhibits C and C1. There can be no doubt about that. The suit of 1910 was also, in my opinion, based upon that contract. It is clear from the history of that suit which I have already recited and the evidence in the case that, even before that suit was instituted, the defendant had denied plaintiffs' all rights based on Exhibits C and C1. He denied his claim to ownership of the property and also that he was a partner in the concern. It was under those circumstances that the plaintiff came into Court. In his plaint he first asked that his right to the property might be established basing his claim on the terms of Exhibits C and C1; but if that claim was not sustainable it was open to him to claim relief on the basis that he was a partner of the defendant and entitled to two annas share in the properties. In fact, he did afterwards seek to amend the plaint by asking for reliefs on the basis of a partnership and it was not seriously disputed that such relief was open to the plaintiff even if his higher claim was found to be unsustainable. I think this case comes very close to the facts of the Privy Council case in Rangayya Goundan v. Nanjappa Rao (5) and I shall satisfy myself with only citing one observation of their Lordships from that judgment:—"The agreement was the cause of action in Suit No. 73 of 1891. There was no other. The purchasers, it is true, sued only for possession; but, independently of the agreement, they had no claim to the possession which was refused to them, nor to the management which was allowed to them. The vendors asserted that the agreement was no longer in force. The obvious course for the purchasers was to demand completion of it. For some reason or other, they did not do so. They did make the agreement the basis of a claim for possession and damages. In this suit they make it a basis of a claim for transfer of the estate. But that is precisely what the Code says they shall not do."

The result is the appeal is dismissed with costs.

SPENCER, J.—I am of opinion that a partnership was created by the execution of Exhibits C and C1 and that the mention in the former document of "this company's" (that is to say, the partnership's) accounts is a very significant indication of the intention of the contracting parties in this matter. I think that, by this sentence, it was intended that the firm should thereupon become indebted to one of the partners, namely, to the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 450 which was the sum advanced by him in the first instance to the original owners of the mine. I am inclined to think that the execution of the Kararnama by the 15th February was, on the 4th February 1907, intended to be a material condition of the contract as the words at the end of Exhibit C1 are so emphatic, namely: "If this is not thus settled within the 15th of this month, I shall relinquish the same irrespective of all the conditions which you executed in my favour;" and in his plaint in the prior suit the plaintiff in paragraph 13 (f and g) of Exhibit IX and the defendant in paragraphs 4 and 8 of his written statement, Exhibit X, showed that they so understood their agreement of the 4th of February. But I think that both parties subsequently showed by their conduct that they waived any right either side may have had to damages arising from the breach of this condition to have a formal agreement drawn up within the date stated or to insist on its performance on any subsequent date by the fact of the defendant taking the sale-deed, Exhibit I, on the 28th February and the plaintiff sending, on 13th September 1897, a lawyer's notice, Exhibit III, threatening a suit to compel the defendant to get a deed of partnership executed and then doing nothing more till he sued in February 1910 to establish his right to the mine. The plaintiff also admitted before the Registrar (vide his statement Exhibit IV) that he executed the sale-deed, and that he had no objection to its registration. So it is not now open to either party to treat the partnerthip as an incomplete contract.

The present suit has been brought for a declaration of the plaintiff's title to a 9/34ths share in the mine and to recover profits from the working of the mine at the rate of 2 annas in the rupee from the date of the 1st defendant's taking possession of the mine and for accounts. The lower Court has held that the plaintiff has no subsisting cause of action and has dismissed the suit both, as time barred and as barred under Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, by reason of the previous litigation between the parties in Original Suit, No. 993 of 1910 on the file of the District Munsif of Kavali, which was renumbered as 199 of 1913 on the file of the Additional District Munsif of Nellore.

In the plaint in the present suit the plaintiff claims that he is entitled to the profits of the mine as they arise under the contract and states that he is advised that it is not necessary to ask for dissolution of the partnership or for the sale of the mine. But, he says, he can claim an account of the profits from the time that profits were received, and that, at any rate, he is entitled to ask for profits arising within six years from the date of the plaint as his right is one accruing from day to day. He states the date from which limitation began to run as some time at the close of 1915, when the 1st defendant finally refused to share the profits with the plaintiff. He does not allege any act of expulsion from the partnership in his plaint, and in his evidence he admitted that he did not issue any notice for the payment of his share in the profits, that after the suit of 1910 he did not demand any share in the profits and that he did not go to the mine or do any business there, although he knew from the beginning that the mine was yielding well. If we now refer to the plaint in the former suit, Exhibit IX, and to the written statement, Exhibit X, it is clear that the plaintiff and the defendant at the time of that suit both treated the partnership as not subsisting on that date, each of them claiming the mine as his own exclusive property. This partnership being not for a fixed term but being one terminable at will, after such an expression of will, it is not open, in my opinion, to the plaintiff to treat the partnership contract as still in existence at the institution of this suit, seeing that the continuance of the relationship of partners depended on the animus of the parties to continue as partners. I hold, therefore, that the partnership was dissolved at least from the date of the suit of 1910, the plaint and the written statement being tantamount to notice of dissolution served by either party on the other. The present suit for an account of the profits having been instituted more than six years after dissolution is thus barred by limitation. The appellant's contention that this suit could be treated as one under Article 131 of the Limitation Act to establish a periodical recurring right is not tenable, in the absence of any fixed dates for ascertaining profits and paying each member of the firm his share.

Then, so far as the present suit was a suit to establish the plaintiff's right to a 2-annas share in the profits and for taking an account, which is the substantial relief claimed by him in this suit, the prayer for declaration being only subsidiary to the main relief, I agree with my learned brother and the Judge who tried the suit in the Court below, that the suit is barred by Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. That rule requires that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action and it declares that 'where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished.' In the suit of 1910 the plaintiff showed by his petition for amendment (Exhibit XII) his consciousness that a claim to share in the profits was a part of the claim arising out of his then cause of action. As under the original agreements,

Exhibits C and C1, no time was fixed for calculation and payment of the profits, it must be taken that the plaintiff would be only entitled to a division of profits either on dissolution of partnership or upon expulsion therefrom. In this case he has not shown that he has any fresh right of action owing to expulsion or dissolution of partnership accruing to him subsequent to the disposal of the suit of 1910; nor has he shown that he ever demanded, at any date, between that suit and the present suit, his share of the profits and that the defendant wrongfully refused to give him his share. In this way, the plaintiff has no claim to put forward in this suit which he could not have put forward in the former suit upon the same cause of action. The suit was, therefore, rightly dismissed and the appeal must also be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This is an appeal against the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh in an execution matter The facts are somewhat complicated and it is necessary to state them fully.

Raja Saroda Narayan was the holder of Gadi Serampure and, in the year 1895, he advanced money to Tikait Ram Chandra, who was the holder of Gadi Gande, which, in consideration of the loan, was mortgaged to him. In 1905 Raja Saroda Narayan was declare to be insane and his estate was taken over by the Court of Wards. In April 1907 the Raja died leaving a widow, Rani Jagadamba Kuari. She held possession of the estate for which, however, there was a rival claimant, viz., Raja Nilkantha Narayan. On the 31st of March 1908 the Court of Wards, on behalf of Rani Jagadamba, brought a suit against Tikait Krishna Prasad, the heir of Tikait Ram Chandra, to enforce the mortgage of the year 1895, by which Tikait Ram Chandra had mortgaged Gadi Gande to Raja Sarada Narayan, the husband of Jagadamba. This suit was No. 93 of 1908. On the 2nd of May 1908 Raja Nilkantha Narain instituted a suit against Rani Jagadamba for declaration of his title to and recovery of possession of Gadi Serampure including all acquisitions made by the late holder and in the schedule to the plaint he mentioned, as one of the properties claimed, the amount due under the mortgage of 1895. This suit was No. 122 of 1908. On the 30th of June 1910, the suit brought by the Court of Wards on behalf of Rani Jagadamba on the mortgage was decreed in her favour and, on the 20th of January 1911, the final decree was passed. Before the passing of the final decree, however, Tikait Krishna Prasad appealed to the High Court. On the 15th of September 1911 a decree was passed in the suit which had been brought by Raja Nilkantha Narayan for recovery of Gadi Serampure and the suit was decreed in full. Against this decree the Court of Wards, on behalf of Rani Jagadamba, filed an appeal. On the 9th of April 1912, Raja Nilkantha took possession in pursuance of his decree. On the 16th of December 1912 Raja Nilkantha Narain was added by Tikait Krishna Prasad as a party-respondent in the appeal against the mortgage decree which had been obtained by Rani Jagadamba. Before the decision of the appeal, on the 26th of May 1915, Raja Nilkantha died and, on the 17th of December 1915, that is, more than six months after the death of Raja Nilkantha, the appellant Tikait Krishna Prasad made an application for substitution of his heirs. The application was dropped, however, with the result that no substitution was made. On the 10th of May 1916 a decree was passed in the mortgage appeal on the basis of a compromise between Rani Jagadamba and Tikait Krishna Prasad. Subsequent to this, the appeal by Rani Jagadamba in the title suit was dismissed except in regard to certain Government Promissory notes. From that decree Rani Jagadamba has appealed to the Privy Council and the appeal is still pending.

I now come to the execution proceeding. On the 15th of February 1911 Rani Jagadamba applied for execution of her mortgage-decree. The execution was stayed on the 22nd of May 1911. On the 1st of November 1913 an application was made by Raja Nilkantha to be substituted in place of Rani Jagadamba in the execution proceeding. On the 3rd of January 1914, the substitution was made and, on the 2nd March 1914, the execution was struck off for want of prosecution. On the 29th July 1917 Raja Nilkantha's heir, Raja Wazir Narain, applied for execution of the original mortgage-decree, dated the 20th January 1911, but this application was dismissed for want of prosecution on the 26th September 1917. On the 4th February 1918 another application was filed by Raja Wazir Narain for execution of the original mortgage-decree and it is this application which has given rise to the present appeal. In his application Raja Wazir Narain claims five lakhs of rupees, which includes a sum of Rs. 61,000 odd which Raja Wazir Narain alleges that he paid to a prior decree-holder. The execution was opposed by Rani Jagadamba on four grounds, mainly—

1. That Raja Wazir Narain was not competent to execute the decree.

2. That the first decree was incapable of execution and, in any case, the application was barred by limitation.

3. That Raja Wazir Narain should not have added to his decree a sum of Rs. 61,000 odd, and 4 That Rs. 75,000 odd had already been paid in part satisfaction of the decree.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that Raja Wazir Narain stood in the shoes of Rani Jagadamba and was entitled to execute any decree which could be executed by her. He found, however, that the first decree could not be executed at all, he accordingly dismissed the application, but found that the Raja was entitled to enforce the appellate mortgage decree which had been passed on compromise. He also came to certain findings with regard to the Rs. 61,000 odd and the Rs. 75,000 odd, but, as no arguments have been addressed to us in regard to these items, it is unnecessary to consider them. Against this order, both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor have appealed. So far as the appeal on behalf of the judgment debtor is concerned, it is against the decision that the Raja is entitled to enforce the appellate mortgage-decree. The application before the Subordinate Judge was for execution of the original decree and both parties are agreed that it was beyond the scope of the case which was then before the learned Subordinate Judge to decide that the Raja was entitled to execute the appellate decree. This appeal, which is appeal No. 63, must accordingly be decreed with costs.

I now come to appeal No. 59, which is the appeal by the decree-holder. The questions which arise in this appeal are—

1. Whether the original decree is capable of execution.

2. Whether the application for execution of the first decree is barred by limitation, or

3. Whether Raja Nilkantha or his son are competent to execute the decree.

The learned Subordinate Judge's judgment on the first point is somewhat obscure, but he appears to have decided that, because the original decree had been superseded by the Appellate Court decree, it was incapable of execution. The facts of the case in regard to this matter are that Rani Jagadamba obtained a decree against Tikait Krishna Prasad in the mortgage-suit. The Takait then appealed and, apparently because Raja Nilkantha had been successful in the title suit against the Rani, he had him added as a party-respondent in his appeal. More than six months after the death of Raja Nilkantha and after the appeal as against him had abated, he made an application to substitute the heirs of Raja Nilkantha, but he did not prosecute this application, the substitution consequently was not made and the compromise was entered into with the Rani alone. The contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant is, that, no substitution having been made of Raja Nilkanta's heirs in the appeal against the mortgage-decree, the Appellate Court decree was void as against his heirs and as against them the only decree is the original decree which, consequently, they are entitled to execute. Ordinarily, this would be so, but I am not prepared to accept the proposition in this particular case. Raja Nilkantha was successful in his title suit against the Rani; but, in the first place, he did not obtain a decree giving him the mortgage-decree which had been obtained by the Rani. All that he obtained was the amount due under the mortgage. It may be that he would have been entitled to sue on the mortgage but, in my opinion, he was not entitled to execute the mortgage-decree which had been obtained by the Rani. It is true that the estate did vest in him by virtue of the High Court decree but he admits that if the mortgage-suit had failed he would not have been bound by that decree, and he further contends that he is not bound by the decree of the Appellate Court. There is, therefore, no mutuality and, this being so, in my opinion, he cannot execute the original decree.

Moreover, even if he were entitled to execute the original decree his application would be barred by limitation. The final decree in the mortgage suit was passed on the 20th January 1911 and the first application made by Raja Nilkantha's heirs was on the 20th July 1917. This application is, on the face of it, accordingly, out of time; but it is sought to save limitation by the aid of Article 182 (2) of the Limitation Act. By that Article, where there has been an appeal, limitation runs from the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court, or from the date of withdrawal of the appeal and the contention is that, so far as Raja Nilkantha is concerned, the date when limitation begins to run is one of three dates, viz., the date on which the appeal abated by reason of substitution not having been made, or the date on which the appellant ceased to prosecute his application for substitution, or, finally, the date of the Appellate Court's decree. The first of these dates is the 26th of November 1915; the second is the 7th of February 1916, and the third is the 10th of May 1916. If limitation runs from any of these dates, the application for execution would be within time. The only question is, whether Raja Nilkantha's heirs can claim the benefit of any of them. I think not. First, with regard to the date of abatement. There was no order of the High Court declaring that the appeal had abated. Under Order XXII, rule 4, clause (3), wher, within the time limited by law, no application is made for substitution the suit "shall abate against the deceased respondent." Rule 11 of the same Order makes the whole of the Order applicable to appeals. Consequently, in this case the appeal, as against Raja Nilkantha and his heirs, abated by operation of law and not on account of any final decree or order of the Appellate Court. In such a case Article 182 (2) does not, in my opinion, apply. This was the view which was taken in Fazal Husen v. Raj Bahadur (1). That was a case under Article 179 of the old Limitation Act, which is exactly the same as the present Limitation Act, except that withdrawal of appeal has been provided for, and in that case the learned Judges said: "It is the decree of the Munsif which he now seeks to execute; he contends, however, that clause (2) of column 3 of Article 179 applies; the words are 'where there has been an appeal, the date of the final order or decree of the Appellate Court.' It is manifest to us that an order by which an appeal abates is not the final decree or order contemplated by that clause; it cannot be executed and the only extant decree, after the making of such an order, is the original decree of the Munsif." That case is on all fours with the present case and, in my opinion, it expresses the correct view of the law. It is true that, in the case of Muhammad Razi v. Karbalai Bibi (2), a contrary view was expressed and the learned Judges relied on the case of Mahomed Mehdi Bella v. Mohini Kanta Saha Chowdhury (3). I have examined that decision, however, and I can find nothing in it to support the conclusion. Moreover, that was not a case under Article 179 and it is on that ground that the learned Judges distinguished the case of Fazal Husen v. Raj Bahadur (1), from the case which was then before them. There is also a decision in the case of Ramgati Dhar v. Nagendra Lal Chowdhury (4) in which it was held that abatement is a final order. No reason, however, is given for that decision and, as I have already said, the case of Fazal Husen v. Raj Bahadur (1) expresses the correct view of the law. I am strengthened in this view by the decision in the cases of Batuk Nath v. Munni Dei (5) and of Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (6). These are cases of non-prosecution of appeals to the Privy Council where, by reason of the operation of the rules governing the procedure in cases of appeal to the Privy Council, the appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution without an order of His Majesty in Council. In those cases it was held that dismissal for non-prosecution did not give a fresh starting point for limitation and the reason given by their Lordships was that the appeal had not been dismissed by an order of His Majesty in Council but by operation of the rules. In Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "The chief matter of argument before this Board was a contention that the decree which it is sought to enforce had been constructively turned into a decree of His Majesty in Council and assigned to the date of the 13th of May 1901, by virtue of the dismissal of the appeal for want of prosecution on that date, and that, therefore, the period of limitation was twelve years from the 13th of May 1901 by virtue of Article 180 of the Indian Limitation Act. Their Lordships see no foundation for this contention, which appears to have been the basis of the decision of the Courts below. The order dismissing the appeal for want of prosecution did not deal judicially with the matter of the suit and could in no sense, be regarded as an order adopting or confirming the decision appealed from. It merely recognised, authoritatively, that the appellant had not complied with the conditions under which the appeal was open to him and that, therefore, he was in the same position as if he had not appealed at all. To put it shortly, the only decree for sale that exists, is the decree, dated the 8th of April 1893, and that is a decree of the High Court of Allahabad. The operation of this decree has never been stayed, and there is no decree of His Majesty in Council in which it has become merged. The period of limitation applying to the enforcement of it, at all material times, was, therefore, a period of three years. The respondents' right is, therefore, barred by limitation."

Although these are not cases of abatement, they are cases of dismissal for non-prosecution, and it appears to me that the principle which has been laid down in those cases must apply also to the present case. The test appears to be whether there is any final order or decree of the Appellate Court which can be executed and, in the case of abatement, there is not. It has been suggested that, if this view of the law be taken, the decree holder is prejudiced by reason of an appellant not taking steps for substitution. This, however, is not so. Even if an appeal be filed, it is always open to the decree-holder to take out execution and, if he does not do so, he cannot complain if he suffers by reason of not exercising his rights. On the ground of abatemant, therefore, the appeal fails.

There remains the question whether the appellant is entitled to count limitation from the date of the Appellate Court decree. The contention is that, even although he was no party to the Appellate Court decree, he was entitled to make use of the decree, because there has been an appeal. It is difficult to understand how the appellant can claim this as a starting point for limitation and, at the same time, say that the Appellate Court decree is not an effective decree. This contention of the appellants, therefore, also fails and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—Appeal No. 63, I agree.

Appeal No. 59. I agree with the order that has been made by my learned brother. I, however, desire to summarise my conclusions on the various points raised in this appeal.

(1). Wazir Narain, in my opinion, cannot execute the original decree when Nilkantha, through whom he claims, was neither a party to the original nor to the appellate decree. No authority has been placed before us for a contrary proposition.

(2). If Wazir Narain claims to execute the original decree, as having stepped in the shoes of Rani Jagadamba, when he must be bound by the appellate decree in which the original decree is merged, and as such, the only subsisting decree capable of execution is the appellate decree and not the original decree. See Kailash Chandra Basu v. Girja Sundari Debi (7).

(3). The application to execute the original decree is, in my opinion, clearly barred by limitation. Wazir Narain cannot get the benefit of Article 182, Schedule I to the Limitation Act and calculate the time against him from the date of the abatement of the appeal against Nilkantha, as I am clearly of opinion that the order of abatement, if any, cannot, constitute 'final order or decree" within the meaning of Article 182 of the Limitation Act ; Batuk Nath v. Munni Dei (5) and Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (6) apply in principle with equal force to the present case.

(4). It is sought to take advantage of the date of the appellate decree to save limitation, and reliance has been placed on Balaram Das Bhagat v. Raja Mukanda Deb (8). Even if the decision of Balaram Das Bhagat v. Raja Mukanda Deb (8) correctly lays down the law, it is clearly distinguishable, inasmuch as the mortgagor who wanted to execute the original decree was a party to that decree though not a party to the appellate decree. Wazir Narain, not being a party to the original or to the appellate decrees, cannot, in my opinion, get any benefit from the date of the appellate decree to save limitation.

These were the four grounds on which this appeal was pressed before us and, as they fail, I agree that it must be dismissed with costs.

A shah jog hundi is a negotiable instrument and the presumption in favour of the passing of consideration contained in section 118 (a) of the Negotiable Instruments Act attaches to it. [p. 983, col. 2.]

Where the question is, whether the consideration for a hundi did or did not pass, and the Court of first appeal places the burden of proof on the wrong party, its finding will not be binding on the Court of second appeal and the latter Court will rectify the mistake. [p. 983, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Delhi, dated the 6th January 1916, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Delhi, dated the 27th July 1915, decreeing plaintiff's claim with costs.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Razak, for Mr. B. N. Kapur, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, Nandu Mal, drew upon himself two hundis for Rs. 2,500 each in favour of the appellant, Madho Ram, one on Mangsir Badi 3rd, Sambat 1971 (5th November 1914), payable after 31 days, and the other on Mangsir Badi 7th, Sambat 1971 (9th November 1914) payable after 61 days. On the 15th December 1914 Nandu Mal brought an action for the cancellation of the hundis on the ground that they were without consideration. A week afterwards, Madho Ram brought a counter-action claiming principal and interest on the earlier hundi which had fallen due. The period for payment on the second hundi had not then expired, so no action was brought on the strength of that hundi.

Both the actions have been tried together, and the crucial question for determination in both the cases is, whether the onus as to consideration lay upon the drawer or the holder of the hundis. The Subordinate Judge held that the hundis were negotiable instruments, and, consequently, there was a statutory presumption in favour of the passing of the consideration, as laid down by section 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. In view of this finding, the Trial Judge, upon a survey of the entire evidence, reached the conclusion that Nandu Mal had failed to prove that consideration did not pass, and he, consequently, decided both the suits against Nandu Mal. The Additional Judge, to whom Nandu Lal went up on appeal, has not expressly dealt with the question of onus; but his judgment contains clear indications that he was under the impression that it was for Madho Ram to prove the passing of the consideration for the instruments. After reciting the respective versions of the parties and the finding of the Trial Court, the learned Judge sets out the point for determination in the following terms:— "The main question for decision is, what transaction was entered into between the parties, and what consideration passed thereon?" He then states "that the question set out above is a very difficult one to decide, as, upon the evidence, it is difficult to say which side is really telling the whole truth" and proceeds to enumerate the circumstances which tell in favour of the version of one party or of that of the other. The learned Judge concludes his examination of the evidence in these words:—

"Upon a review of the evidence and the peculiar circumstances of the case, I am not satisfied that consideration passed on the first hundi of Mangsir Badi 3rd, Sambat 1971, but, as regards the hundi of Mangsir Badi 7th I think that consideration did pass, and find accordingly."

The above extracts from the judgment of the Appellate Court, and more especially the last one, make it clear that the Court thought that it was the duty of Madho Ram to establish consideration for the hundis, and that it was, for this reason, that the Court reached the conclusion that, while successful in proving consideration as regards the latter hundi, he had failed to satisfy the Court "that consideration passed on the first hundi."

The learned Counsel for the respondent contends that, when both the parties have adduced all the evidence in support of their respective versions and the Court has considered all the material thus placed before it, the question of the allocation of onus is immaterial. He accordingly urges that the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court should not be disturbed in second appeal, even though that Court may have taken an erroneous view of the burden of proof. To this contention we cannot possibly accede. It seems to us perfectly clear that, in cases of this character, onus probandi is the most vital question between the parties, and that it is the determination of this question which settles the fate of the case. We have perused, with considerable care, the judgment of the Additional Judge, and we find that the learned Judge felt some difficulty in deciding which of the parties was telling the truth as regards the payment or otherwise of the money in respect of the hundis. It seems to us that, if the learned Judge had been distinctly asked to answer the question whether the respondent had satisfied him that the consideration did not pass, his reply would have been in the negative. We are accordingly of opinion that, if the lower Appellate Court has placed the onus on the wrong party, it is the duty of the Court of second appeal to rectify the mistake.

Whether the onus was on the drawer to prove want of consideration does not require any elaborate discussion, because it is admitted, by the learned Counsel for the respondent, that the hundis in question must be regarded as negotiable instruments, and that the conclusion of the Trial Judge on this point is not open to any objection. The instrument, in respect of which the Additional Judge has given his verdict against the appellant, is what is called a Shah jog hundi, which is a bill payable to a Shah or banker. A hundi of this kind is similar, to some extent, to a cheque, crossed generally, which is payable only to, or through, some banker. The object in both cases is that the payment should be made to a respectable person and not to a person who has got hold of the instrument in a surreptitious manner. In the case of a Shah jog hundi it is the duty of the payer to make inquiry before payment that the payee is a respectable person, so that if the hundi turns out to be a stolen or a lost one, or to contain a forged endorsement, the payer may be able to demand a refund from the Shah to whom the money has been paid by mistake.

The terms of the instrument make it clear that, not only Madho Ram could demand payment on the strength thereof, but also his endorsee, provided that the latter was a respectable holder, that is, a man of worth and substance known in the Bazar. The bill could be transferred by endorsement, the only restriction being that the payment could be made only to a person of the above description. We consider that it satisfies the requirements of a negotiable instrument, and that the presumption in favour of the passing of consideration attaches to it.

The learned Subordinate Judge has expressed his opinion that the evidence produced by the drawer is unsatisfactory and does not relieve him of the onus cast upon him. It seems to us that the Additional Judge would have reached the same conclusion, had he not made a mistake in placing the onus upon the wrong party. We are accordingly of opinion that his judgment must be set aside; and we, therefore, allow the appeal and, setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Court of first instance with costs throughout.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 5 OF 1920.

MUHAMMAD ZAKI ALI KHAN v. AHMAD SHAH.

Where the equity of redemption in certain property vests in several persons one of whom is the mortgagee, one of those persons cannot, under section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, compel the mortgagee to allow him to redeem the entire property; he can only redeem his own share in the property. [p. 985, col. 2.]

A Muhammadan made a Will by which he devised the whole of his property to his eldest son. Subsequently, he executed a deed of gift, by which he gave the whole of his property to his wife in lieu of dower. After his death, a dispute arose between his eldest son and his widow as to their respective rights under the Will and the deed of gift. The dispute was compromised, and a certain portion of the property was given to the son, the rest being allotted to the widow. The son executed a deed of relinquishment that he and his heirs would have no claim to the property allotted to the widow. The latter executed a similar deed of relinquishment:

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 12th December 1919.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, H. C. Dutt and N. C. Dutt, for the Appellants.

Babu Salig Ram, for Respondents Nos. 13, 14, 15, 17 and 18.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Pandit Chand Narain Harkauli, for Respondent No. 19.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption, and the only question for consideration is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to redeem the entire property mortgaged. The mortgage in question was effected by Musammat Hurmuzi Begam in favour of Haider Ali Beg on the 31st January 1885 and comprised the entire village Deogawan with its hamlet, Madhia.

The mortgaged property formed part of the estate belonging to Ahmed Ali Beg. Ahmad Ali Beg had several sons, one of whom was Haider Ali Beg, and several daughters, one of them being Musammat Kazmi Begam, the mother of the plaintiffs. He had also a wife, Musammat Hurmuzi Begam. On the 14th September 1861 he executed a Will, devising his entire property to his eldest son, Haider Ali Beg. On the 27th September 1877 he executed a deed of gift by virtue of which he gave the entire property to his wife, Musammat Hurmuzi Begam, in lieu of her dower.

On the death of Ahmad Ali Beg, a dispute arose between Haider Ali Beg and Musammat Hurmuzi Begam as to their respective rights under the said deeds. On the 2nd June 1884 a compromise was arrived at, whereby, Haider Ali Beg agreed to take the six villages situated in the Hardoi District, with the village Nawalpur and the phulwari land in Outubnagar in the Sitapur District, and relinquished all his claims to the remaining property, which was to go to Musammat Hurmuzi Begam. In pursuance of this compromise, a deed of relinquishment was written by Haider Ali Beg, agreeing, on behalf of himself and his heirs, to forego all his claim to the entire estate other than the properties allotted to him (Exhibit 7). On the same date Musammat Hurmuzi Begam also executed a deed of relinquishment whereby she agreed, on behalf of herself and her heirs, to have no concern with the properties awarded to Haider Ali Beg (Exhibit 8). By a tamliknama executed by her at the same time, she divided the greater portion of the property assigned to her among her sons and daughters other than Haider Ali Beg (Exhibit 1).

The mortgage in question was made by Musammat Hurmuzi Begam after the above settlement and relates to one of the villages awarded by virtue of that settlement to her. That settlement is conclusive and binding on the parties, as to the rights held by each of them in the estate left by Ahmed Ali Beg, deceased, but is not conclusive as to any rights which either of the parties might have acquired since by inheritance or any other method of devolution. Musammat Hurmuzi Begam died on the 1st December 1902. Haider Ali Beg died in August 1909.

The defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are the heirs of Haider Ali Beg. Their contention is that, on the death of Musammat Hurmuzi Begam, their father, Haider Ali Beg, acquired an interest in the equity of redemption, and the integrity of the mortgage, made by Musammat Hurmuzi Begam in favour of Haider Ali Beg, was thereupon broken up. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted that contention and refused to allow the plaintiffs to redeem more than their share.

The deeds of relinquishment executed by Haider Ali Beg and Musammat Hurmuzi Begam do not, in our opinion, bear out the construction, which the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants here seeks to place on them. The deed executed by Musammat Hurmuzi Begam stated—"As everbody has one day to leave this transitory world and to give up his existence, so with a view to obviate the said dispute, which existed in consequence of the deed of gift in respect of the Karimnagar Estate, as well as the village Nawalpur and the phulwari land situated in Qutubnagar, possessed by my son, now I, by so far admitting the priority of the Will, do hereby of my own accord covenant and declare that the said son shall retain possession of the said estate, the village Nawalpur and the phulwari land, I and my heirs shall have no concern whatever with the aforesaid estate, the village Nawalpur and the phulwari land, because I have satisfied the other heirs out of the estate situated in the Sitapur District, possessed by me." (Exhibit 8). There is nothing in this agreement to show that, if Haider Ali Beg died in the lifetime of Musammat Hurmuzi Begam, the latter would not have been entitled to claim a share in the property assigned to the former, for what was settled were the rights claimed by Haider Ali Beg and Musammat Hurmuzi Begam under the Will and the deed of gift referred to above in the estate of Ahmad Ali Beg, and not the rights which one might acquire in the property of the other after the settlement.

The deed executed by Haider Ali Beg similarly confined itself to a disavowal of all claims to the property assigned to Musammat Hurmuzi Begam. It stated—"As the said mother, having admitted the priority of the Will, relinquished her claim to the Karimnagar Estate in the Hardoi District. Nawalpur and the phulwari land situated in Qutubnagar in the Sitapur District, accepted my possession and has executed an agreement to-day, so I, too, as regards the estate and villages in the Sitapur District, excluding Nawalpur and the said phulwari land, do hereby agree and declare that my mother shall remain in possession at her pleasure of the property entered in the deed of gift situated in the Sitapur District, save the village Nawalpur and the phulwari land in Qutubnagar, I and my heirs shall not have at any time any concern whatsoever. If I make any claim, it shall be considered void and illegal." These clauses amount to nothing more than a disavowal of a right to claim anything in contravention of the agreement. They do not imply a disavowal of any future right that might accrue to Haider Ali Beg independently of this agreement. Haider Ali Beg thereby relinquished all claims as against Musammat Hurmuzi Begam in respect of the property assigned to her; but that relinquishment does not involve the reliquishment by him of his claim to any portion of the property of Musammat Hurmuzi Begam, if he became entitled to the same on her death as one of her heirs. We agree with the construction placed on these documents by the learned Subordinate Judge, and hold that the plaintiffs are not entitled to redeem anything more than their interest in the mortgaged property. Where the equity of redemption is vested in several persons, one of whom is the mortgagee, one of those persons cannot, under section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, compel the mortgagee to allow him to redeem the entire property. As pointed out in Hamida Bibi v. Ahmad Husain (1), where the integrity of the mortgage is broken up and the rights of one of the holders of the equity of redemption have become vested in the mortgagee himself, the fusion of rights created renders the resort to piecemeal redemption as the only practical remedy available.

Among Mussulman Rajputs of Jullundur District a sister is not entitled, by custom, to succeed to the property of her brother as against collaterals of the sixth degree even though the property is not ancestral qua the collaterals.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jullundur, dated the 21st March 1916.

Mr. Durga Das, for Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant.

Messrs. N C. Mehra and Devi Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises related to 1,345 kanals, 16 marlas of land situated in village Chomon of Jullundur District. The suit was brought by Musammat Jiwi, sister of the last male owner, Balla, who died some 37 years before suit. Since his death his widow, Musammat Zainab, had been in possession, and the plaintiff's cause of action arose on her death, in April 1915, when the defendants, who are collaterals in the sixth degree of Balla, obtained mutation in their favour.

The lower Court has dismissed the plaintiff's suit for a declaration that she is entitled to succeed her brother, on the ground that in the tribe of the parties, who are governed by custom, no custom has been established whereby a sister succeeds to her brother as against collaterals, even though the land in dispute is not proved to be ancestral qua the defendants. The plaintiff has preferred an appeal to this Court and the only question which we are called upon to decide is, whether plaintiff has proved a custom whereby she excludes the defendants' collaterals. The parties are agriculturists and Mussalman Rajputs and one of the canons of agricultural custom is that, in regard to immoveable property, collaterals exclude female connections of the propositus except the widow, the mother and, in some cases, the daughter. The riwaj-i-am of the district is in uncompromising conflict with the claim of the plaintiff, and, although she has called a few witnesses who make bald statements to the effect that sisters exclude collaterals, she has been unable to cite in detail one single case in this tribe in which a sister has obtained succession One case of Musammat Atto of village Bhatrana has been mentioned, but no details are given and no documentary evidence on the subject has been adduced. The other case of Musammat Mina in village Heon, relied upon by the plaintiff in the Courts below, is against her, for that case was litigated up to this Court and decided unhesitatingly against Musammat Mina. In Ranjha v. Musammat Jindwaddi (1), a case of Biloches in the Muzaffargarh District, the sister did succeed, but the riwaj-i-am was in her favour and a rule of custom obtaining amongst Biloches is no confirmation of the plaintiff's claim. In Bholi v. Kahna (2) a sister was successful against collaterals of the sixth degree, but the parties concerned in that case were Dogras of the Amritsar District. The riwaj-i-am of that district appears to have been silent on the subject, but the case was decided in favour of the sister by reference to the riwaj i am of the Lahore District. That decision can avail the plaintiff nothing. The plaintiff, we agree with the Court below, has signally failed to establish any custom in her favour.

It is, however, argued that, inasmuch as the property in dispute is not ancestral qua the defendants, and inasmuch as customary succession is based upon the assumption that the land is ancestral, the onus should have been placed not on the plaintiff but on the defendants. To this contention, however, we cannot accede, for the plaintiff, as plaintiff, was bound to prove her case and the riwaj-i-am is against her and makes no distinction in its express exclusion of sisters between ancestral and self-acquired property.

For these reasons, we dismiss this appeal but leave the parties to bear their own costs.

A decree of the Benares Court was transferred for execution to the Bhagalpore Court. Before the latter Court the judgment-debtor took an objection that the application was barred by time. The objection was disallowed by the executing Court but was upheld on appeal. The executing Court thereupon dismissed the application for execution as having been infructuous and sent the papers back to the Benares Court with the certificate required by section 41 of the Civil Procedure Code. Subsequently, the High Court set aside the order allowing the objection of the judgment-debtor. The decree-holder, thereupon, made an application to the Bhagalpore Court to proceed with the execution. The Court sent for the record from the Benares Court and proceeded with the execution :

Held, that the effect of the order of the High Court was to put the parties in the position in which they were before the papers were returned to the Benares Court, and that, therefore, the Bhagalpore Court was entitled to proceed from the stage at which the proceedings in execution had been stopped by the order of the Court of Appeal, the position being as if no certificate of the manner of execution had been sent under section 41 of the Civil Procedure Code to the Benares Court. ### JUDGMENT.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge of Bhagalpore, confirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge, rejecting the petition of objection of the appellants before us.

The facts of the case may be shortly stated. This proceeding arises out of an objection to an application to execute a certain decree of the Benares Court passed some time in January 1907. The decree was transferred to Bhagalpore for execution and received there some time in December 1917. The appellant filed an objection alleging that the execution was barred by limitation. The objection was, however, disallowed on the 21st August 1918, but an appeal having been preferred against that order the objection was upheld by the Court of Appeal, which held that the application of the decree-holder was barred by limitation. The matter, however, came up to the High Court. This Court held, on the 26th March 1919, that the application was not barred and the record was remitted to the lower Court. In the meantime, the execution case in question was dismissed as having been infructuous, on the 30th November 1918, and the papers were sent back to the Benares Court with the requisite certificate.

After the receipt of the records from the High Court, the executing Court called upon the decree-holder to take the necessary steps. On the 7th June the decree-holder filed an application to proceed with the execution. The execution Court thereupon wrote to the Benares Court to return the record and informed the Benares Court of the result of the proceeding in the High Court. The Benares Court returned the papers on the 3rd July 1919. After the receipt of the record on the 7th July 1919, the Court proceeded with the execution.

The appellant thereupon took various objections which were rejected by the Subordinate Judge. He preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge, who also upheld the Subordinate Judge. Hence this second appeal.

Four points have been urged by the learned Vakil for the appellant, and I shall deal with these in the order in which they have been presented before us.

His first objection is that the Bhagalpore Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the execution petition, inasmuch as the record of the case had already been sent to the Benares Court with the usual certificate and there was nothing left for the executing Court at Bhagalpore on which that Court could proceed with the execution. In my opinion, this ground is not maintainable, inasmuch as, after the decision of the High Court, all that had been done by the Subordinate Judge in execution in pursuance to the order of the Court of Appeal had been undone by that decision. Therefore, the learned Subordinate Judge was perfectly entitled to proceed from the stage at which the proceedings in execution had been stopped by the order of the Court of Appeal. The fact remains that the Benares Court returned the execution record just as it had received it, and it was then that the executing Court of Bhagalpore proceeded with the execution. In my opinion, it comes to this, that the order of the Court of Appeal having been revoked by the High Court the position has become as if no certificate of the manner of execution had been sent under section 41 of the Code to the Benares Court.

The second objection which has been raised is, that the execution petition filed on the 9th June 1919 was not in continuation of the previous execution. This also is a ground which cannot be accepted, for the reason which I have already given. The order of the High Court really put the parties in the position in which they were before the certificate was sent to the Benares Court.

The third ground taken is, that the previous execution was ultra vires as no notice under Order XXI, rule 22, was served. It may be that no notice under Order XXI, rule 22, was served, but that objection is of no avail to the appellant now, inasmuch as he himself appeared and raised various objections and, therefore, he cannot be heard on the plea of non-service.

The fourth objection is, that the execution was barred by limitation. This, again, is a point which, in my opinion, cannot be raised in this second appeal. The point was raised before the Subordinate Judge but not before the Appellate Court, and the Court will be justified to hold that he, having raised it in the first Court abandoned in the Appellate Court, and once the point is abandoned, it cannot, in my opinion, be raised in second appeal. These were the four objections which have been taken on behalf of the appellant and as they fail, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

COUTTS, J.—I agree.

Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Devise in favour of female—Estate taken.

Where a Hindu testator devises property to a female, the mere fact that the devisee is a female would not cut down the estate granted to her by the Will to a life-estate. The devise must be construed in the same way as if it had been made to a man If the word malik is used in the devise it must be presumed that an absolute estate is devised unless there is something in the context to qualify it. [p. 969, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 8th July 1916, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 25th January 1915, decreeing the claim.

Mr. M. S Bhagat, for Bhagat Govind Das, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 28th of May 1911 one Lal Chand is said to have executed a Will, bequeathing his property in equal shares to his mother, Musammat Wazir Devi, and his widow, Musammat Har Devi. On the 12th May 19 3 Musammat Wazir Devi made a gift of certain property left by Lal Chand in favour of her daughter and daughter's son. The present suit has been brought by Ram Chand, an uncle of Lal Chand, for a declaration that this gift shall not affect his reversionary rights on the death of the widow, Musammat Har Devi. The first Court found that Lal Chand was not proved to have executed the alleged Will and, consequently, Musammat Wazir Devi had no proprietary estate to gift in favour of her daughter. It also held that, even if the Will were duly executed, it did not confer full powers of alienation on Musammat Wazir Devi. On these two grounds it decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal by the defendants, the lower Appellate Court came to no finding on the question of the execution of the Will as it agreed with the first Court that the Will did not convey any absolute estate to Mus mmat W.zir Davi, and that, therefore, she was incompetent to make the gift which was the subject of the suit.

Musammat Wazir Davi has preferred a second appeal to this Court on the ground that the Will does, in fact, confer upon her an absolute estate. The Will in question commences with the recital that the testator has had bad health for some time and does not expect to live ; that he is in full possession of his senses and proposes to dispose of his separate property, moveable and immoveable, between his wife and mother in the following proportions. The operative part of the Will, so far as it can be deciphered, as it seems to have been much damaged by water, runs as follows:—

"Meri walida wa aurat ba hissa nisfa nisfi ke amadni apas men taksim karke kharch karen aur jabtak main zinda hun main malik hun, bad wafat mere ke meri walida wa meri aurat agar mere parda men rahegi to nisf jaedad, mankula wa ghair mankula, ke kulli ikhtiar wa milkiat meri aurat wa walida ki samjha jaegi. Intakal waghaira ke waqt zarurat unko ikhtiar hoga lihaza main chand kalama bataur wasit nama ba khushi khud tahrir kar deta hun ki sanad rahe."

Some slight doubt exists as to the actual word preceding the word ikhtiar, but we think that Counsel for the appellants to be correct in saying that it appears to be kulli. Now the first Court considers that Musammat Wazir Devi only had power to alienate in case of necessity. The lower Appellate Court considers that the term malik when applied to a female in possession of moveable property does not necessarily mean an absolute owner, and that a Court will always lean against considerations giving unqualified control to a widow.

It is contended before us, first, that the terms malkiat and ikhtiar must be presumed to convey an absolute estate; secondly, that this grant of an absolute estate cannot be limited by any subsequent provisions purporting to curtail the enjoyment of the estate ; and, thirdly, that the word zarurat cannot be held to be equivalent to jais zrurat, i. e, legal necessity. In short, that the subsequent clause regarding the power of alienation merely amplifies the terms of a previous grant of an absolute estate. In support of this view we have been referred to several authorities. Now, no doubt the view formerly taken in this Court was that expressed in Rallia Ram v. Musammat Ved Kaur (1), viz, that it may be presumed, in the absence of clear indication to the contrary, that a devise of immoveable property to a Hindu widow does not give an estate of inheritance, but only a life-estate, or a widow's estate as understood by Hindu Law. This view, however, can no longer be held to be good law as stated. In Surajmani v. Rabinath Ojha (2), a Privy Council decision, a Hindu executed a deed of gift, to take effect after his death, in favour of his wives and his son's widow ; the words used by him in describing the estate bequeathed were malik wa khud ikhtiar. The Privy Council held that, in order to cut down the full proprietary rights that the word malik imports, something must be found in the context to qualify it ; but the only fact relied upon was that the donee was a woman and a widow, and this was expressly decided not to suffice to cut down the full proprietary right. In Gurmukh Singh v. Makhan Singh (3), which was a case of gift by a Hindu to his wife and mother in equal shares, it was remarked that a deed in favour of a Hindu female is to be interpreted in just the same way as any other deed and if the wording of the deed taken as a whole points to an intention to carry full ownership, then full ownership, is conveyed just as if the beneficiary were a man. In Vaishno Das v. Musammat Deoki (4) the words malik waris hogi, as describing the estate conveyed by a Hindu to his daughter-in-law, were held by a Division Bench to be equivalent to the words malik wa khud ikhtiar in the Privy Council Allahbad decision and to convey an absolute estate ; and the same interpretation was placed on the words malik kamil in a case of a devise to a widow decided by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Shadi Lal and reported as Nek Muhammad v. Maya Ram (5). The same interpretation was placed on the words sampuran malik as applied to a widow in a case reported as Sulochana Debi v. Jagattarini Debi (6). In

PARTAB DUBEY v. AJUDHIA ESTATE.

Bombay, where a testator divided his property between his wife and his daughter, saying that one part should be given to his daughter Mani and after her to her issue, the bequest was held to be that of an absolute estate, Chunilal Lallubhai v. Bhogilal Lakhmichand (7). The general conclusion to be drawn from these instances is that the word malik by itself implies an absolute estate and the word milkiat in the deed now in question is equivalent to describing Musammat Wazir Devi as malik.

Against these authorities three cases have been cited for the respondents. The first of these is Motilal Mithalal v. Advocate General of Bombay (8). There it was held that the Allahabad Privy Council decision did not affect previous decisions, but that the knowledge of the testator as to the incidents of a widow's estate and the ordinary notions or customs of Hindus is to be considered in construing a Will. In that case the words used were: My wife shall be malik; but these words were much qualified by the following provisions in the Will:—

She was to carry on the management of the estate with the advice of two persons who were to appoint a good agent and in case of death of one of them another was to be appointed. They were to take action in case she disobeyed the advice and the testator's jewelry was to be open to periodical inspection by them.

It was gathered that the testator's intention was not to convey an absolute estate. In a similar case, reported as Kandarpa Nath v. Jogendra Nath (9), a bequest to wife and mother was limited by numerous provisions quite inconsistent with the conveyance of an absolute title. In fact, alienations, except of a small portion, for pious objects were strictly prohibited. The third case cited Deorao v. Bapuji (10) was a Will in favour of a widow described her as pura malik. This case hardly helps the respondents as it was held that the testator conveyed an absolute estate to his widow.

In the present case we do not think that there is any presumption that the testator, assuming that he did, in fact, execute this Will, can be presumed to have had any intention of limiting the estate of his mother or that there is anything in the clear wording of the Will to lead us to this conclusion. Had the beneficiary been a man the interpretation would be clear that full estate was conveyed to him, and that he could alienate it, and if this be conceded, it follows that the same conclusion must be reached although the beneficiary is a woman.

We must, therefore, hold that the terms of the Will conveyed an absolute estate to Musammat Wazir Devi, and, accepting the appeal we remand the case to the lower Appellate, for decision of the other points arising in the appeal before it. Costs will be costs in the cause. Stamp on appeal to this Court to be refunded.

If a tenant's rent is favourable, and deliberately so, the landlord's remedy is a suit under Chapter VII A of the Oudh Rent Act and not a notice for enhancement of rent. [p. 991, col. 1.]

The decision in a previous suit between a tenant and his Zemindar's thekadar does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the tenant and the Zemindar, for the previous suit was not between the same parties or between parties under whom they claim. [p. 991, col. 1.]

BIBI UMIUL RASUL v. RAM CHARAN CHAMAR.

Second appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 16th April 1919.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a suit contesting a notice of enhancement of rent. The plaintiff's case is that he holds on a favourable rate of rent and that enhancement cannot be effected by notice. If the rent is favourable, and deliberately so, of course he must succeed, as the respondent's remedy is a suit under Chapter VII A of the Oudh Rent Act.

Plaintiff relies on the fact that the rent is extremely low and that in previous cases, between him and thekadars (not the Maharaja of Ajudhia, or the Court of Wards itself), this rent has been held to be favourable. The previous suits, however, do not support a plea of res judicata, for they were between the plaintiff and thekadars of the proprietor, and cannot, therefore, be held to have been between the same parties or between parties under whom they claim. In such a case it is quite conceivable, for instance, that the actual proprietor might be able to rebut a contention that a rent is deliberately favourable while the thekadar might not. At the same time, the fact that a rent had been found as against a thekadar to be favourable might make it incumbent on the Court to frame an issue on the point when the actual proprietor was sued, and I might, perhaps, have been inclined to remand an issue for further findings had I not observed that the plaintiff has other land which he holds with special rights, and the low rent in the present case may be fairly attributed to mere negligence on the part of the proprietor rather than to deliberate favour. The plaintiff did not attempt to show grounds for such deliberate favour but merely relied on previous decisions which could not support a plea of res judicata.

In the circumstances, I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12 (3)—Appeals, several, from same judgment—Copy of judgment, one, filed in respect of all appeals—Exclusion of time, whether to be permitted in respect of all appeals.

It is a standing practice of the Patna High Court that where more appeals than one are presented by the same appellant from the same judgment only one certified copy of the judgment need be filed. [p. 991, col. 2.]

In such a case the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment would be excluded under section 12 (3) of the Limitation Act in computing the period of limitation in respect of all the appeals filed by the appellant, although only one copy of the judgment is filed for all the appeals. [p. 992, col. 1.]

Mr. Kailaspati, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Fakhruddin and K. Husnain for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The question for determination in this case is, whether the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment appealed from ought to be deducted in respect to three out of six analogous appeals presented by the same appellant from the same judgment in circumstances under which it was not necessary to file a copy of the judgment appealed from.

The appellant brought six suits against different tenants for rent. The suits were determined by the lower Court in one judgment. From that judgment the appellant, plaintiff in the suits, has appealed and six separate memoranda of appeal have been filed.

It is the standing practice of this Court that, where there are more appeals than one presented by the same appellant from the same judgment it shall be necessary to file with the memorandum of appeal one certified copy of the judgment only. That was done in the present case, and, with regard to these six appeals, only one copy of the judgment was obtained and only one copy was filed.

DATTATRAYA DUBGAPPA v. PUNDLIK NARAYAN.

With regard to three of the six appeals, all of which were filed on the same day, no question arises because they are clearly in time after deducting, in the one case in which a copy of the judgment was filed, the time requisite for obtaining that judgment and the time requisite for obtaining the decree, and in the other two cases the time requisite for obtaining the decree. In the three cases now under consideration, deducting the time requisite for obtaining the decree but without deducting the time requisite for obtaining the judgment they would be out of time by one day, and the question for determination is whether, in the circumstances which I have just stated, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment ought to be deducted in computing the limitation period for those three cases. Section 12 of the Limitation Act provides in clause (3) that where a decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall also be excluded.

The first thing to notice about the section is that it does not limit its operation to cases only in which the copy of the judgment has to be filed with the memorandum of appeal, and this question was considered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Wajid Ali Shah v. Nawal Kishore (1) and it was there decided that, although it was not necessary that an application for review of judgment should be accompanied by a copy of the decree or order or judgment sought to be reviewed, nevertheless, in computing the period of limitation the time requisite for obtaining those documents might properly be excluded. If that is so, we have to consider what the situation was in the present case.

It was known to the plaintiff that one copy only of the judgment would be necessary for the purpose of prosecuting the six appeals. It was not necessary for her to obtain six copies because it was well known what the practice of the Court was, namely, that one copy alone in such a case as this would be required. Therefore, it seems to me that in obtaining that copy of the judgment it cannot be said that she obtained it for the exclusive purpose of any one particular appeal. A copy of the judgment in fact was obtained for the purpose of each of those appeals and it was obtained as much for the purpose of enabling the appellant to consider it as for the purpose of filing it with the memorandum of appeal which would have to be done in one at least of the cases; so that, in my opinion, the copy of the judgment in this case was obtained as much for the purpose of the three appeals which it is contended are now out of time as it was for the purpose of the other appeals, and I think that, in these circumstances, the case is one which comes within the operation of section 12, clause (3) of the Limitation Act. That being so, it follows, if my view is right, that each of these appeals was in time.

Where a decree is sent to the Collector for execution and the Collector sells the property of the judgment-debtor, then, as soon as the whole of the purchase-money agreed to be paid at the sale is paid to the Collector, it becomes assets received and held by the Court within the meaning of section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, and an application for rateable distribution made after that date must be treated as out of time. DATTATRAYA DURGAPPA v. PUNDLIK NARAYAN.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Kanara, in Appeals Nos. 184 and 185 of 1916, amending the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Sirsi, in Civil Suit No. 118 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff obtained a decree in Suit No. 355 of 1910 against two of his debtors. In execution of that decree the plaintiff attached certain immoveable property belonging to the said judgment-debtors. The property was put up for sale by the Collector on the 18th of January 1915. The whole of the said proceeds were received on the 3rd of February 1915 and were forwarded to the Court, which had sent the decree for execution to the Collector, on the 4th of March 1915. Thirteen creditors of the judgment-debtors applied for rateable distribution of the assets received in execution. The plaintiff had to file this suit, because he objected to five of them, the present defendants Nos. 1 to 5, sharing in the rateable distribution and he had to make the other seven parties, now defendants Nos. 6 to 12, as they were the other execution-creditors. Although, as regards defendant No. 1, it was held that the restoration of the application was correct, apparently he was not allowed by the Trial Court to share in the distribution, and the decree of the Trial Court was confirmed in first appeal. He has not appealed to us. Therefore, as far as he is concerned, his application to share in the distribution must be considered as refused.

As regards the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 the question is, whether they filed their application before the receipt of the assets within the meaning of section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code. That section says: "Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization shall be rateably distributed among all such persons." I first draw attention to an obvious mistake which was made by both the lower Courts, viz, that clause 1 (c) of section 73 applied to the facts of this case. Both Courts seem to be of opinion that, in cases where the assets come to the hands of the Court by sale of immoveable property, applications to share in the sale-proceeds must be made, in order to be in time, prior to the sale. But clause 1 (c) of section 73 only refers to cases of immoveable property being sold in execution of a decree ordering the sale for the discharge of an incumbrance thereon. It is only if there is a balance, after discharging the expenses and the incumbrances, that the balance can be rateably distributed amongst those creditors who have, prior to the sale of the property, applied to the Court. But where property has been realised in execution of a decree other than a decree referred to in section 73 (1) (c), then the important date is the date of the receipt of the assets by the Court, and the only question is whether, when a decree has been sent to the Collector under the rules for execution and when the Collector has sold the property and received the sale-proceeds, it can be said that the assets are held by the Court and have been received by it. Paragraph 9 of the Third Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code lays down what the Collector should do when he sells the property under the orders of the Court. He has to render accounts to the Court of all moneys which come to his hands and of all charges incurred by him in the exercise and performance of the powers and duties conferred and imposed on him under the provisions of the Schedule, and then he shall hold the balance at the disposal of the Court. Therefore, the Court, on receiving an account from the Collector, can direct him to pay what is due to the executing creditors and the actual cash need never come into the hands of the Court. So that, if the appellant's argument were correct, it follows that there would be no time fixed before which applications should be made for rateable distribution as the assets might never be received by the Court at all.

I do not think it necessary to consider the question whether the Collector is the agent of the Court. The word 'agency' generally arises in questions of contract. There is no reason why, when the Court is given powers by Statute to appoint the Collector as its officer to execute the decree, it may not be said that the Collector is the officer of the Court with certain delegated powers; for instance, he is empowered to confirm the sale although he has no power to set aside the sale. Since the Collector has to hold the money of the sale-proceeds at the disposal of the Court, the Court can draw against those sale-proceeds and direct how they shall be dealt with in the same way as a person may draw against his balance with his Bank. We must hold that when the Collector receives the sale proceeds in execution, then the assets are held by the Court and have been received by the Court. But the assets are received by the Court when the whole of the purchase-money has been received, not when a deposit merely has been received according to the conditions of sale when the sale takes place. But when the whole of the purchase money agreed to be paid at the sale is paid to the Collector, then, I think, that the purchase-money must be treated as assets held by the Court and received by the Court. Any application made thereafter by a judgment-creditor for rateable distribution must be out of time.

Therefore, in my opinion, these appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—In order that the provisions of section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure can be applied, there must be two things: a receipt of assets, and a holding of those assets by the Court. When a sale of immoveable property in execution is transferred to the Collector, the Collector or one of his subordinate officers actually receives the sale-proceeds, and that is what happened in this case. Clause 9 of the Third Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code lays down what the Collector has to do with the money that he so receives. It is quite plain from this clause that he is not directed, at any time whatever, to remit the money to the Court. It is perfectly true that he sometimes does remit the money, after deducting necessary charges, to the Court, as he did in this case. But whether he does that or not depends altogether upon the particular system which obtains in a particular province or district. The Collector can just as well make every payment as can the Court. It is clear, therefore, that, theoretically, there might be—and I have no doubt that actually there are—cases in which the sale-proceeds, i. e., the assets, are never received by the Court at all in the narrow sense of actually being paid into Court or to one of the officials of the Court. And yet, although there is no receipt of assets by the Court in the narrow sense, there can be, and rightly can be, a rateable distribution. If that is the result of the law—and it seems to me to be inevitably a possible result, and very properly and rightly a result—then the receipts by whomsoever they are held must be deemed to be held by the Court. And they are very properly deemed to be held by the Court, because they consist of money which is at the disposal of the Court and which cannot be paid to anybody except under the Court's orders.

It seems to me, therefore, that in this case the law shows us, and plainly shows us, that the 3rd of February 1915, the date on which the price was paid to the Collector, is that date before which applications for reteable distribution were to be made if they were to be allowed under section 73. The particular applications we are dealing with were not made before that date, so they cannot be allowed.

The result is, that the decrees of the lower Court are confirmed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal—Judgment, alteration of—Revision—Appeal filed subsequently but beyond time—Appellant doubtful as to proper course—Delay, condonation of.

A judgment was altered at the instance of one of the defendants. The other defendants questioned the propriety of this alteration by means of an application for revision, and, after dismissal of this application, they filed the present appeal against the decree following upon the altered judgment. The appeal, however, was filed beyond time counting the period from the date of the decree, but was within time if the period was reckoned from the date of the dismissal of the application for revision :

Appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 24th April 1918.

Chaudhri Ram Bharose Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mumtaz Husain and Babu Har Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree which was passed on the 24th April 1918. The contention of the defendants-appellants is, that the decree as it was passed on that date gave to the plaintiffs no cause for complaint; that on the 9th November 1918 the judgment was altered at the instance of the defendant No. 4 so as to allow him to share in the accounts, and that the necessity for contesting the propriety of that decree arose when the alteration was made.

The defendants appellants at first approached this Court with an application for revision to have the order directing the alteration to be made, set aside, but they were unsuccessful. They then filed the present appeal. The right to appeal having accrued to them when the judgment was altered on the 9th November 1918, it seems to us that the delay which has taken place in filing the appeal earlier, should be excused. It may have been open to them to file the appeal had they not applied to this Court in revision for the discharge of the order, altering the judgment; but the judgments of this Court in the revision proceeding show that the propriety of the order making the alteration was a matter about which more than one view was possible, and the defendants-appellants might reasonably have been in doubt as to the course they should pursue. An opportunity should, therefore, be given them to file an appeal from the decree and judgment as altered and test the propriety of the alteration made.

Let the appeal be, therefore, admitted under section 5 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908). As the appeal only affects the share claimed by Ramman, defendant No. 4, the valuation of which is very small, the printing and translation of the papers may be dispensed with. Let the 28th July 1919 be fixed for the hearing of the appeal.

Appeal admitted.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 132—Suit to recover value of paddy secured under mortgage—Limitation.

A suit to recover the value of paddy due under a mortgage-bond by the sale of the immoveable properties mortgaged, is one to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property, the mortgagee's interest being the money value of the paddy and not specific paddy. To such a suit Article 132 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act is applicable.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Midnapore, dated the 16th January 1917, reversing the decree of the Munsif, 2nd Court, at Midnapore, dated the 16th of December 1915.

Babus Jyotish Chandra Hazra and Santosh K. Pal, for the Appellants.

Babu Mohini Nath Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover the value of paddy due upon a mortgage bond by the sale of immoveable properties mortgaged to the plaintiffs' predecessor.

The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiff but that decree was reversed on appeal by the learned Subordinate Judge on the ground that it was not a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property and that, therefore, Article 132 of the Limitation Act did not apply. He relied upon the decision in the case of Rash Bihari Das v. Kunjabihari Patra (1). All the terms of the mortgage-bond, and specially the conditions under which the mortgage was to be enforced in default of payment, however, do not appear from the report of that case.

On the other hand, in the case of Nilmoney Sinha v. Hardhan Das (2), where the deed recited that the land was given to secure payment of interest in kind, Mookerjee, J., held: "The substance of the transaction was that the land was made security for the value of the paddy, because upon failure to deliver the paddy, the mortgagee would be entitled not to claim specific paddy but merely to recover the price thereof; in other words, the parties contemplated that should it be necessary for the mortgagee to enforce his security the land would be liable for the value of the paddy payable as interest. In my opinion, it is a reasonable construction of Article 132 to hold that, in a case like this, the interest, which was the value of the paddy, though variable from time to time, was charged upon the mortgaged premises."

In the present case the mortgage-bond provided that, in default of payment of the paddy and the interest, which was also provided to be paid in paddy, the mortgagee would be entitled to attach and sell the mortgaged property and realise the dues, and if that was insufficient, he would be entitled to realise them also from other moveable and immoveable property of the mortgagor and from his person. It is clear that, upon failure to deliver the paddy the mortgagee was entitled to recover money and not to claim specific paddy.

We may also refer to the cases of Sripati Lal Dutt v. Sarat Chandra Mondal (3), Sridhar Chandra Maiti v. Ram Gobinda Jana (4) and to the unreported case in Second Appeal No. 2556 of 1917 decided by us on the 23rd April 1919* in all of which the case of Rash Bihari Das v. Kunjabihari Patra (1) was distinguished.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Munsif.

VITHALDAS MEGHJI—DEFENDANT.

Succession Act (X of 1865), s 111, applicability of —Hindu Law—Will—Alternative bequests, validity of —Defeasance of estate—Testator, power of.

Section 111 of the Succession Act contains merely a rule of construction, and is subject to any provision in a Will which may rebut its application. The intention of the rule is, that, when there is a gift followed by a contingent gift over, the inclination of the Court is to interfere as little as possible with the first gift, the second gift being read as a gift in substitution and not in remainder, where, therefore, the expressed intention of a testator is to create a life-estate, the provisions of the section cannot be invoked to convert that estate into an absolute estate. The section is applicable only where the time of the occurrence of an event is left uncertain,—as, where a contingent gift is made to depend upon the death of the legatee. [p. 998, col. 2; p. 999, col. 1.]

Where a Hindu makes a bequest in favour of his widow, and on her death a gift to his daughter for life, and after that an alternative gift, on the one hand to her male issue, if any, and, on the other hand, in default of male issue, to a charity, the bequest to the male issue is void, but not the alternative bequest to charity. [p. 999, col. 2.]

A Hindu testator is competent to provide for the defeasance of a prior absolute estate contingently on the happening of a future event,—as where a life-estate is bequeathed to a widow with power of disposition during her lifetime, and after her to her daughter, and neither of them exercises that power. Messrs. Desai and Coltman, for Defendant No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit filed by the Advocate-General as representing a charitable trust—the Anathashrama—created by the Will of Hansraj Ludha. The plaint prayed for a declaration of the properties that were the subject-matter of the trust and for the removal of defendant No. 1 from the office of trustee and for the administration of the estates of Hansraj Ludha and of his wife and of the trust properties. But by consent the suit has been confined to one for declaration as to what properties are subject to the trust and for the preparation of a scheme for the administration of the Charity. The defendant No. 1 is the trustee and supports the Advocate-General. The second defendant claims certain properties adversely to the trust and it is against him that the declaration is sought.

Hansraj Ludha died at Jamnagar on the 27th day of May 1901, leaving a widow, Hiravabu, and a daughter, Jivibai. His property consisted of :—

(a) A house in Bombay—the Ramdas Mala.
(b) Two houses in Jamnagar.
(c) Moveables, consisting of
(i) a fund standing in the name of a former wife and of Hiravabu ;
(ii) household effects and furniture ;
(iii) Hiravabu's Stridhan ; and
(iv) the assets of his business termed "Panji" in his Will.

The provisions of Hansraj Ludha's Will (omitting details not relevant for the purposes of this suit) are as follows :—

The trust fund is set apart out of the Panji : some of the surplus is applied to legacies ; and the rest of the Panji, the Stridhan, and the fund in the wives' names and the household effects and furniture are given to Hiravabu absolutely by clauses 7, 5 (a), 5 (b) and 5 (c) of the Will. The Jamnagar houses are given to Hiravabu absolutely.

The Ramdas Mala is disposed of by clause 5 (d) of the Will, under which Hiravabu is given a life-estate with a power of disposition for specified purposes in her lifetime.

But all the bequests to Hiravabu are subject to clause 9, under which they are all declared to be to Hiravabu for life, on her death to Jivibai for life and on Jivibai's death to her lineal male descendants, if any, and if not to the Anathashrama Charity.

Hiravabu died a year after her husband, on the 5th of June 1902. She made no disposition in her lifetime of the Ramdas Mala but left a Will in which she expressed her intention to conform in all respects to the direction contained in her husband's Will, and then proceeded to make the following dispositions.

The Mala she gives to Jivibai and in case of her death without male lineal descendants to charity [clause 11 (3)].

The Jamnagar houses to Jivibai and in case of her death without male descendants to her sister's sons (clause 13).

The surplus of the Panji and the wives' Khata she bestows in legacies and to other charities (clause 16).

The Stridhan and household effects she gives to Jivibai absolutely (clauses 14 and 15).

But all the bequests to Jivibai are subject to a defeasance clause—clause 31 of the Will—in case of her death without children.

Now the trustee of the Anathashrama is the defendant No. 1 who is the executor of both the Wills. He has possession of the part of the Punji set apart for the charity. But the Advocate General claims, for the charity, the Ramdas Mala, the Stridhan, and the household effects, the surplus of the Punji and the wives' Khata. Mr. Taraporevalla, for the trustee, supports that claim.

As regards the Ramdas Mala the provision of Hiravahu's Will is inoperative for it is quite clear that, under the Will of Hansraj, clause 5 (d), Hiravahu was given a life-interest and a limited power of disposition during her life which she did not exercise.

The Mala is disposed of in clause 9 of the Will of Hansraj in the following words:

"All the property which Hiravahu may not have disposed of shall accrue to Jivibai on the following conditions: Should there be Jivibai's lineal male descendants the said property shall go down to the said lineal male descendants but should there be no lineal male descendants of hers then as to my Mala which there is in Bombay and which is known as that of Vithaldas Ramdas, if the same should be in the same condition in which it is now or as to the sum which may have been received either by the sale or mortgage thereof, the right thereto for life will accrue to Jivibai (i. e., Jivibai shall have a life interest therein). But after Jivibai's lifetime the said property shall not go down to Jivibai's heirs or to my heirs (but) the right in respect of this Mala in Bombay, in whatever form the same may be at that time, shall form part of the 'Anathashrama Dharmada Fund' which fund I have set apart."

There is, therefore, after the death of Hiravahu a gift to Jivibai for life and after that an alternative gift, on the one hand to her male issue, if any, and, on the other hand, in default of male issue to the charity. The bequest to the male issue is void under the rule in Tagore case [Jotendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore] (1) but that would not affect the other alternative bequest to the charities: Javerbai v. Kablibai (2).

The Ramdas Mala is, however, situate in Bombay and the construction of the Will, so far as it relates to this property, is, by section 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, made subject to section 111 of the Indian Succession Act. It is, therefore, contended that as the gift over to the charities is contingent on Jivibai dying sonless, it cannot take effect unless that event overruled before the period of distribution, i. e, before Hiravahu's death; in other words, the charity can only take if Jivibai died sonless in the lifetime of Hiravahu.

Section 111 of the Indian Succession Act embodies a rule in Edwards v Edwards (3) which, though overruled in O'Mahoney v. Burdett (4), has still statutory force in India. But it is, at most, a rule of construction and is, therefore, subject to any other provisions in the Will which may rebut its application.

The reason of the rule is that, when there is a gift followed by a contingent gift over, the inclination of the Court is to interfere as little as possible with the first gift. The second gift is, therefore, read as a gift in substitution and not in remainder. In Illustration (d) to section 111 of the Indian Succession Act, the legacy is to A for life, and after A's death to B, and "in case of B's death without children" to C. This is an absolute gift to B. and the contingent gift to C. only operates if the gift to B. fails owing to B.'s death in A.'s lifetime. But if the gift to B were expressed by the testator to be for life only there is no scope for the operation of the rule. It cannot be invoked to defeat the expressed intention of the testator and convert a life-estate into an absolute estate. Again, the occurrence of the event on which the contingent gift depends is the death of B. If the estate of B. is not expressed to be a life-estate that does not sufficiently define the time of the event. Did the testator mean that B. should have a life-estate and that the ultimate gift should take effect even if he survived A.? Or, did the testator mean that B. should have an absolute estate and that the ultimate gift should only take effect if B died in the lifetime of A.? Thus, even though the death of B. is mentioned, the time of the event is left uncertain and the section comes in and fixes the time. But where B. is expressed to have a life-estate, it is immaterial whether B. dies before or after A. The death of B., therefore, sufficiently defines the time for the occurrence of the event. This circumstance excludes section 111, which only applies where the time is left uncertain. The case of Bhupendra Krishna Ghose v. Amarendra Nath Dey (5) is an express authority on this point.

Now, in my opinion, the gift to Jivibai of the Ramdas Mala is for life, and, that being so, section 111 of the Indian Succession Act would not govern the construction of this clause of the Will. It is immaterial whether Jivibai died before or after the previous life-tenant, Hiravahu. It is contended that the gift to Jivibai, and after her to her lineal descendants, if any, is an absolute gift and that, therefore, section 111 applies. But, in the first place, the expression "shall accrue to Jivibai on the following conditions" shows the intention was not to confer an absolute estate. And, in the second place, clause 9 expressly says Jivibai shall have a life interest. In the third place, the testator was a Hindu and it is very unlikely that he intended to confer an absolute estate on a woman who had passed out of his family by marriage.

The Charity, therefore, is entitled to the Ramdas Mala.

Next, as to the wive's Khata and the surplus of the Panji. The absolute bequest to Hiravahu of these properties in clauses 7 and 5 (b) of Hansraj's Will is reduced by clause 9 of the Will by the following words :—

"In like manner as regards the several sums which I have directed to be paid in cash to my wife Hira, if she should not have dealt with (or disposed of) the same and if Jivibai should get the same and if Jivibai also should not have in her lifetime appropriated the same to her own use, then those sums also shall form part of this Anathashram fund."

Hiravahu has a life-estate with power of disposition during her lifetime and after her Jivibai and if neither of them exercise that power, the property goes to the Charity. Hiravahu had, therefore, no power to dispose of the surplus Panji and wives' Khata by Will and these must go to the Charity.

Stridhan and household effects are not cash and, therefore, not affected by clause 9 of Hansraj's Will. Hiravahu was entitled to dispose of them by her own Will. By clause 14 she has given them to Jivibai absolutely. But those are cut down by clause 31 of her Will which is as follows: —

"I direct the properties bequeathed to Jivibai by this Will with full power and control are bequeathed on this condition that the same shall not descend to her heirs in case she dies issueless but shall go to the funds for the destitute."

The fund of the destitute is Anathashrama Charity. This is a defeasance clause and it is contended that it is inoperative as this part of the Will is not governed by the Hindu Wills Act and section 118 of the Indian Succession Act has, therefore, no application.

But it is settled law that it is competent to a Hindu testator to provide for the defeasance of a prior absolute estate contingently on the happening of a future event: Kristoromoni Dasi v. Narendro Krishna Bahadur (6). It is not the case of a repugnant condition attached to an absolute gift. This clause is, therefore, valid, and by virtue of it the Charity is entitled to the Stridhan and household effects.

I, therefore, find on the issues:—

(1) What is the interest of the Charity under the two Wills of Hiravahu and Hansraj Ludha ?

Under the Will of Hansraj the Charity is entitled to the Ramdas Mala, the wives' Khata and the surplus of the Panji, and under the Will of Hiravahu to the Stridhan and household effects.

(2) What interest did Jivibai take in the Mala under the Will of Hansraj after the death of Hiravahu ?

P., a trader at Agra, had consigned to him by rail, 113 bags of chillies to be delivered at Kasganj. The consignment arrived in a sealed wagon on the 11th May and was ready for unloading on the 13th May; the contract with the Railway expressly provided that the wagon should be unloaded by the consignee. P. arranged with a local firm at Kasganj to take delivery on his behalf and sent them the Railway receipt on 6th or 7th May. R., a servant of this firm, presented himself on the 13th May, without the Railway receipt, and was permitted to unload the wagon, after doing which he left the bags on the Railway premises and went away. He tendered the Railway receipt on the 22nd May and again did not remove the goods. On the 31st May a member of the firm asked to be shown P's goods. But with the exception of one bag, the remaining bags which made up the consignment were not then on the Railway premises. P. then brought the present suit against the Railway and the consignor for damages for the loss or non-delivery. R was not produced as a witness, nor was any evidence led to prove that he did not in fact remove the goods, or as to the terms of any arrangement whereby, after unloading the consignment, the bags were allowed to remain on the Railway premises :

Held, (1) that the Railway as carriers could not be made liable for any loss due to the carelessness or neglect of the consignee in not removing the goods within a reasonable time of their arrival at destination ; [p. 1003, col. 1.]

(2) that, in the absence of any explanation of the delay between the 13th May when the goods were unloaded and the 22nd May when the Railway receipt was produced, the liability of the Railway as carriers had ceased ; [p. 1004, col. 1 ]

3) that, in the absence of evidence, express or implied, of any arrangement with the Railway, there was no liability incurred by the Railway as warehousers, and the mere fact that a charge was made for demurrage would not necessarily give rise to such an implication. [p. 1004, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Aligarh.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. T.B. Sapru and the Hon'ble Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought by Lachmi Mooleband, a trader of Agra, against the Bengal and North Western Railway, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, for Rs. 2,060, damages for the loss or non-delivery of 113 bags of chillies consigned to him by a trading firm of the name of Bharose Potdar of Darbhanga District. The latter firm were joined as defendants together with the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway, but both these defendants obtained judgment in their favour in the Trial Court.

The cause of action alleged in the plaint was that the defendant's servant negligently pointed out the wrong bags at the destination of the consignment, and that the consignment was thus not delivered. It is not alleged to whom this demonstration was made, nor to whom the consignment was in fact delivered, but the breach of duty is alleged to have taken place on the 22nd of May. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. The District Judge, treating it as an action for non-delivery, held that the defendants were liable and remanded the suit for the amount of damages to be ascertained. Against this order an appeal has been brought to the High Court. The learned District Judge says truly that the facts are not in dispute. They are more fully stated in the judgment of the Trial Court, and, though no finding of that Court has been overruled by the lower Appellate Court, the judgment under appeal does not in some respects set out the facts which were proved in evidence. We, therefore, looked into the evidence in order to supplement the findings contained in the lower Appellate Court's judgment. The net result of the uncontradicted evidence and of the findings of the lower Appellate Court may be thus summarised.

The goods were despatched by the Bengal and North-Western Railway on the terms of a consignment note signed by the consignors on the 3rd of May. The bags were marked with identification letters and were noted on the consignment to be in some respects defective through damp and want of repair. They were sent in a sealed van over the Bengal and North-Western Railway and the Rohilkhand and Kumaun systems to Kasganj Station on the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway. The sealed van arrived at Kasganj Station on the night of the 11th May, in the same condition as it had been despatched and it was placed in the goods-shed ready for unloading on May 13th.

The position from this point requires to be carefully considered. The evidence is scanty, but for this the plaintiff is to blame. Indeed, he is under a very strong suspicion of having intentionally kept back evidence which it was incumbent on him to produce. We know, however, that the plaintiff resided and carried on business at Agra. To suit his own convenience he had ordered to this consignment of chillies to be delivered at Kasganj intending to convey it thence to Agra in carts. He had made arrangements with a local firm at Kasganj to take delivery for him. The Railway receipt had to be sent by the consignor to the plaintiff and by the plaintiff to his agents at Kasganj. It is possible that there may have been delay in the arrival of the Railway receipt but even if there was no more than accidental delay the plaintiff's own arrangements were responsible for that delay. As a matter of fact, there is a note in the evidence that the Railway receipt had been posted from Agra to Kasganj on the 6th or 7th of May. It ought to have arrived there in ample time to enable the plaintiff's agents to produce it and take delivery on the 13th of May, when the wagon containing the consignment was placed in the goods-shed ready for unloading. The wagon was sealed and, obviously, the Railway Company's servants had no authority to break those seals or to empty the wagon in the absence of the plaintiff or some authorised agent of the plaintiff. The contract expressly was that the wagon should be unloaded by the consignee. Now, it is a serious matter for a wagon to be left standing in a Railway goods-shed, more particularly if, as was probably the case here, the wagon is the property of another Railway Administration. Undoubtedly, if the consignee had taken no steps to unload the wagon for eight or nine days after its arrival in the goods-shed he would have found himself liable not only for ordinary demurrage in respect of goods lying in a Railway shed, but to heavy charges on account of the Railway wagon which had been kept standing unnecessarily and prevented from earning money for the Railway Administration which owned it. The Railway Company were clearly entitled to refuse to allow the goods to be unloaded except upon production of the Railway receipt, so that the unloading and the actual delivery of the goods and their removal from the Railway Station premises might take place at once. It is, however, a matter of common experience that Railway Companies are always ready to meet the convenience of their customers in matters of this sort. It is clear from the evidence that one Reoti Ram, a commission agent, carrying on business at Kasganj, who was accustomed to act for various firms in this matter of taking delivery of goods and who was employed to take delivery of this particular consignment by the local firm who were acting as agents for the plaintiff, presented himself at the Kasganj Goods Office on May, the 13th, and asked to be allowed to unload the wagon. He was permitted to do this on his adducing prima facie evidence of his being in communication with the proper parties in that he was able to mention the exact number of sacks making up the consignments. The important point, however, is that the permission given to Reoti Ram to unload the goods without presenting the Railway receipt was of the nature of a concession. The Railway Company, to judge from the notice issued in the present case, ordinarily assumes that any goods left on their premises through delay on the part of the consignee in taking delivery are left there at the owner's risk, but, whatever may be the general rules, it seems obvious that Reoti Ram, having obtained permission to unload the wagon, was under a peculiar obligation to see to the safe custody of the consignment pending its removal from the Railway premises. Moreover, there is nothing in the evidence to show that Reoti Ram would not have been permitted to remove the consignment at once if he had shown any anxiety to do so. Perhaps, an Indemnity Note of some sort would have had to be executed by the local firm which employed Reoti Ram, but there is certainly nothing to show that it was the Railway Company's fault that the goods lay on their platform for a single day after May the 13th or, indeed, that they actually did so. All we know is that Reoti Ram eventually presented the Railway receipt on May the 22nd. He handed it over to the Goods Clerk, duly endorsed with a clear receipt for the entire consignment of 113 bags of chillies. He then went away to his employers, and there he seems to have made a statement which ought never to have been admitted in evidence, as, in the absence of Reoti Ram from the witness-box, it was pure hearsay. All we know is, that, in consequence of something Reoti Ram had said, one Jhamman Lal arrived at Kasganj Railway Station on May, the 31st, and asked to see the plaintiff's goods. The bags or sacks which had made up the plaintiff's consignment of chillies were not then on the platform or on the Railway premises, with the possible exception of one single sack, but this circumstance is obviously irrelevant on the question of the liability of the Railway Company.

We have to consider, in the first place, why the Railway receipt was not presented until May, the 22nd. This may conceivably have been due to pure negligence on the part of the local firm who were acting as the plaintiff's agents. It seems at least equally probable, if not more so, that the Railway receipt had reached Kasganj before May, the 13th, and was being deliberately kept back as part of a swindle which was perpetrated on the plaintiff by the removal of his sacks, containing better quality chillies, for the benefit of some other person, but for which it was hoped ultimately to make the Railway company liable. However this may be, it seems out of the question for the plaintiff to obtain a decree in this suit when he has not put Reoti Ram into the witness box, when he has not proved that Reoti Ram did not in fact remove the whole of his consignment of chillies, and when he has given no evidence whatsoever as to the terms of the arangement according to which the bags of chillies were allowed to remain on the Station premises (assuming that they were so allowed to remain) after Reoti Ram had unloaded them from the wagon.

These considerations are sufficiently obvious and have not really been met in argument on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent. What was pressed upon us on his behalf was that we ought to treat the judgment under appeal as having recorded certain findings of fact, treat these findings as binding upon us and give the plaintiff a decree on the strength of them. The findings recorded are not sufficiently definite and are not altogether consistent with one another. What the learned Subordinate Judge apparently intended to find was, that Reoti Ram was not permitted by the Railway Company to remove the plaintiff's bags after he had unloaded them from the truck, that he was unable to produce the Railway receipt before May, the 22nd, and that when he arrived there on May, the 22nd, with the Railway receipt the plaintiff's sacks had disappeared, and that there had remained on the platform only a number of bags of chillies of wholly inferior quality which had also arrived at Kasganj in another wagon on the night of May, the 11th. In fact, the lower Appellate Court seems to think that it is highly probable, if not actually proved, that the consignees of these 175 bags of inferior chillies managed to steal the plaintiff's consignment and got away with it, leaving comparatively valueless stuff of their own behind. It is apparently on some such view of the case that the lower Appellate Court has held the defendant Railway Company liable for the loss of the consignment. It cannot be said that findings to the above effect are recorded in clear and explicit terms in this judgment under appeal. Moreover, as regards the suggestion that the consignees of the 175 sacks got hold of the plaintiff's consignment, the finding really rests upon no evidence at all. The lower Appellate Court had not even materials before it on which it was entitled to conclude that Reoti Ram had not himself removed the plaintiff's consignment, unless it acted upon the inadmissible evidence as to what Reoti Ram was alleged to have told the plaintiff's agents. There is, therefore, no clear finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court which we are bound to follow. As a matter of fact, the evidence of the Goods Clerk at Kasganj shows that there were three, if not four, consignments of chillies of different kinds unloaded upon the Railway premises at that place at or about the same time. One or two of these consignments Reoti Ram was ostensibly taking delivery of on May, the 21st, and subsequent days.

The Railway Company was certainly not responsible for the honesty of Reoti Ram or of any other agent or sub agent of the plaintiff's employed to take delivery of the consignment. Even supposing there was no dishonesty, but that the sacks making up the plaintiff's consignment somehow got mixed up with consignments intended for other people and were thus lost to the plaintiff, this could not have happened without gross carelessness on the part of Reoti Ram, and it is impossible to agree with the lower Appellate Court that, on the evidence produced in this case, any liability in the matter attaches to the Railway Company.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was right, and that the suit was properly dismissed. There is no evidence of misfeasance or conversion. There is no evidence of the allegation originally relied upon that the Railway servants pointed out the wrong goods to the plaintiff's agent, even assuming that he did not know which they were, of which there is also no evidence. There is no evidence as to how, when or by whom the consignment in dispute was in fact removed, nor as to what share the Railway servants took in its removal, nor as to what knowledge they had of the removal

By a strict application of the ordinary rules of law and procedure to the plaintiff's case, it ought on this ground alone to be dismissed for want of evidence to support it. But in order to remove any doubt we have gone on to consider whether, upon the lines of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, assuming that some stranger wrongfully removed the goods destined for the plaintiff and marked with his name, the Railway Company can be held liable in law for a breach of duty as carriers.

Prima facie, the proper person to sue for non-delivery is the consignor against whom the consignee has his own remedy. This is so if the consignor undertakes to make delivery himself. If the terms of the contract of sale are such that delivery is to be on rail, the consignor undertaking to send the goods for the consignee, the former is the agent of the latter and the Railway becomes the bailee of the person to whom the goods are sent. This view is supported by, and carried out in, sections 90 and 91 of the Indian Contract Act. The peculiarity of this case is that neither the consignee nor the agent Reoti Ram has given evidence, and the only terms of the contract in evidence are such as are to be gathered from the consignment note. But, assuming in favour of the plaintiff that he had the right to sue the Railway Company as bailees for failing to take reasonable care of the goods entrusted to them as carriers, whereby a total loss has occurred, the first question which arises is, at what point does their obligation under such a contract of carriage cease, and have the defendants been guilty of any breach of duty within the period of their obligation?

The principles governing this question are contained in a clear statement by Chief Justice Cockburn in the course of the judgment in Chapman v. Great Western Railway Co. (1). The contract of the carrier being not only to carry but also to deliver, it follows that the custody of the goods as carrier must extend beyond the period of their transit. A reasonable time must be allowed for the exigencies of traffic and for the convenience of the consignee to whom delivery has to be made. And when the carrier is ready to deliver, the recipient is allowed a reasonable time and no more to take delivery. But he cannot, for his own convenience or by his own laches, extend the liability of the carrier beyond a reasonable time. In that case, the goods having arrived at their destination both on the 24th and on the 25th of the month, were destroyed by fire on the 27th on which date also at a later hour the plaintiff, who was consignor, and consignee called for the goods. It was held that the liability of the company as carriers had ceased. This view of the case has been overlooked in the lower Appellate Court. No explanation of the delay between the unloading on the 13th May and the so called breach of duty on the 22nd May, was attempted by the plaintiff or required of the defendants. It is clear that the contract of carriage was over. To hold otherwise, would be to impose a wholly unreasonable burden upon carriers. The Railway Company might be responsible as warehousers, when a somewhat different set of considerations would arise, if any evidence had been led to show that such an arrangement was either expressly or impliedly made. The charge for demurrage does not necessarily give rise to such an implication, nor would any duty rest upon the company for breach of which they have been held liable by the lower Appellate Court until such an arrangement had begun.

Having regard to the absence of any attempt at the trial to prove delivery by the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway to the wrong person as alleged in an offensive letter written by Mulchand's Vakil on his instructions to the agent of the Rohlikhand and Kumaun Railway at Bareilly City on the 6th June 1918, the claim appears to be an attempt to obtain money from the Railway by a statement either wilfully untrue or made recklessly without any belief in its truth.

The appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs here and below.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, ACTG. C. J.—The only point we are concerned with at the moment is, whether this appeal lies. For the purpose of discussing that point, one must make one or two assumptions. There was a suit in the High Court which came before the Chief Justice and was disposed of by him, but, although he had heard the evidence and had written a considered judgment as to a number of points that arose in the case, he did not decide the case on the merits. He said :—"My best course is to allow the plaintiffs leave to withdraw their suit with liberty to take such action hereafter as they may be advised against the defendants," and afterwards he added: "I think both parties have been in the wrong and so I make no order as to costs." Thereafter, a formal order was drawn up, which said : "This Court doth order that the plaintiff firm be and they are at liberty to withdraw this suit and take such action hereafter as they may be advised."

The assumption I am making is that this was an order made under clause 2 of rule 1 of Order XXIII, Civil Procedure Code.

It was suggested that the order made was not an order of that kind at all, but something altogether different. That may or may not be so. At present, I say nothing whatever on that point. I assume that the order is an order under rule 23, and then the question is whether an appeal lies against that order. If the case had been tried in the Mofussil, I think it would be held that no appeal lay, and, therefore, we have to turn to clause 15 of the Letters Patent or Charter and see whether this pronouncement of the Judge is a judgment within the meaning of the words of that clause. It seems to me that it is a judgment.

We have been referred by both sides, both by the appellant and the respondent, to a former Chief Justice's judgment in Miya Mahomed v. Zorabi (1), and that judgment sets out in a very useful form certain previous decisions, which no doubt have regulated for many years the view which has been taken by this High Court of the meaning of the word "judgment" under clause 15. The special words which have been relied on appear in a judgment of the Calcutta High Court of 1872 in the case of Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company (2). There the Chief Justice said,—

"We think that 'judgment' in clause 15 means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties determining some right or liability. It may be either final, or preliminary, or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it, leaving other matters to be determined."

Now that quotation, I have been told in argument, is a definition of the word 'judgment'. I very respectfully venture to say that it is nothing of the kind, but that it is only a description of what a judgment is—a very admirable description too—but it is a description written more particularly with reference to the special facts of the case in which it was delivered. It is not a definition, and it does not completely describe a judgment for all purposes and in all cases.

In this case we have a pronouncement of the Judge, which puts an end to the suit, and, moreover, it puts an end to a suit in which evidence had been recorded and arguments heard, and it seems to me, therefore, that it possesses what I conceive to be one of the most important and fundamental characteristics of a judgment. And it seems to me that, howsoever you look at it, whether you regard it from the point of view of its important or of its effect on the parties, from both those points of view also, it possesses the characteristic of a judgment. I unhesitatingly say that it is a judgment.

There was one point which was raised in the argument and I think it is a point of interest. It was suggested that, where a plaintiff files a suit and before any notice is served on the defendant, the plaintiff applies to withdraw the suit with leave to file another, and the Court grants that leave, the Court's order would not be a 'judgment" within clause 15 of the Letters Patent. Whether it would or would not, I do not propose at the present moment to say. It seems to me that, even assuming that that would not be a judgment, it does not follow that all orders allowing withdrawal with leave are not judgments. When you have the Court permitting withdrawal of the suit at the stage which this suit had reached; when evidence had been recorded; when both parties had been heard; when both parties had had an opportunity of saying what they had to say, on this question of granting leave, then you have a very different state of affairs. I say, both parties had an opportunity of saying what they had to say, because, even if the suggestion of withdrawal came from the Bench, and if it came at the time the judgment was delivered, yet the parties or their representatives were present, and could there and then have said anything they liked in favour of or against the suggestion of the Judge.

So the possible difficulty (if it is a difficulty) which arises from the hypothetical case suggested is not, to my mind, a serious obstacle, and I still remain just as firmly of opinion as before that the pronouncement of the Court with which we have to deal, is a judgment within the meaning of clause 15, and I think the preliminary objection taken to the appeal is of no validity.

MARTEN, J.—At the trial of this suit some eight issues were raised, the trial lasted some three or four days, and judgment was reserved. On the case being called on for judgment, the learned Trial Judge delivered a full judgment, dealing with all the points raised in the case, and he came to the conclusion that, on the case as then presented by the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs must fail. He held in effect that the plaintiffs had not tendered goods of the contract quality and that, therefore, they could not sue for damages for breach of contract by the defendant to accept those goods. But he thought on the facts that the defendant had never determined the contract, and that, consequently, the contract was still open, and, therefore, the plaintiffs could still tender, or might still be able to tender, goods of the contract quality, or that, alternatively, the plaintiffs could base their case on the principle of Braithwaite v. Foreign Hardwood Company (3). Then the actual result which the learned Judge arrived at was to give the plaintiffs liberty to withdraw their present suit and he made no order as to costs.

The result, so far as the defendant was concerned, was that there was an entirely abortive suit of which he had to bear his own costs. Against that decision, the appeal is brought, and it is objected that it is not an appealable order. That, I think, depends on what meaning is to be given to the word "judgment" in clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

The cases which have hitherto guided these Courts in considering what is a "judgment" have adopted as a working test words to the following effect, viz., "Where a pronouncement of the Judge affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability" [See the cases of Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company (2) and Miya Mahomed v. Zorabi (1).] I respectfully and entirely concur with what my Lord the Chief Justice has said that, whatever form of words are used, one must consider the particular case in which they were first used. The above words were in fact first used in a case where the learned Judge had not got in contemplation the class of case we have to deal with here. But even if I apply those very words, it seems to me that this order of the Trial Judge giving liberty to withdraw and to institute a fresh suit did affect the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. One result was this. The plaintiff was given liberty to do that which at that moment he could not do, viz., to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of the action, and thereby to give the Court jurisdiction or power to hear the new suit which otherwise it would not be able to do. Unless that leave had been given, the suit would either have been withdrawn without leave, in which case no fresh suit could be instituted, having regard to Order XXIII, rule 1 (3), or else it would have been dismissed, in which case, equally, under sections 11 and 12 no fresh suit could have been instituted.

It must be borne in mind, too, that in the case in which the above working test was first adopted, the point was whether an order giving leave to sue under clause 12 of the Letters Patent was appealable: see De Souza v. Coles (4) and Hadjee Ismail Hadjee Hubbeeb v. Hadjee Mahomed Hadjee Joosub (5). It was held that it was appealable, because it gave the Court a jurisdiction against the defendant which it otherwise would not possess. It seems to me that there is some analogy between that class of case and the one that we have got now to deal with. I have endeavoured to look at this case as a matter of principle, and not to be prejudiced by the late stage which this suit had reached, and by the fact that, prima facie, the order was an unusual one to make at that stage. Accordingly, I have endeavoured to test the case from the same point of view as if a summons had been taken out before the trial for leave to withdraw the suit on certain terms. In the result, I am of opinion that the decision which the learned Judge came to here was a judgment between the parties within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and that, accordingly, it is appealable.

That, in my opinion, is sufficient to dispose of this preliminary point, but there was a further point taken by Mr. Ghaswalla which I think, I ought to mention. He contended, on the authority of Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (6), that in Order XXIII, rule 1, you must read sub-sections (a) and (b) of sub-rule 2 together, and that in effect the "other sufficient ground" in sub-section (f) must be ejusdem generis with "some formal defect" in sub-section (a). He then went on to say that what the learned Judge did here was in fact to give leave to the plaintiff to take new steps after the date of the judgment, viz, to tender new goods, and that could not possibly be ejusdem generis with any "formal defect" any more than in one of the cases cited it was permissible to allow the plaintiff to withdraw his suit in order to enable him to get more evidence: see Bai Kashibai v. Shidappa Anaya (7). But I am not prepared to accept that argument on the true construction of Order XXIII. I am very reluctant, speaking for myself, to fetter what appears to me to be the plain words of the Act, and, although it may be that one has to read sub-sections (a) and (b) together, I am, as at present advised, by no means satisfied that the ejusdem generis rule applies.

(3) (1905) 2 K. B. 543; 74 L. J. K. B. 688; 92 L. T. 637; 10 Com. Cas. 189; 10 Asp. M. C. 52; 21 T. L. R. 413.

One of the other cases cited to us is a decision of Sir Basil Scott in Mahipat v. Nathu (8), but it really deals, I think, with the merits of the appeal, or what will be the merits of the appeal, viz., whether, if an appeal lies, it was proper for the Judge to give the liberty he did. I have not yet heard the appeal on its merits, and, therefore, I say nothing on this decision of Sir Basil Scott. It was a case where there was undoubtedly jurisdiction, because it was a case on revision from the Mofussil. The only materiality of it on the present application is this: that in the Mofussil the Appellate Court has power to deal with orders of this nature or revision, whereas it is contended that similar orders made by Judges on the Original Side are not capable of revision by the Appellate Court.

I respectfully agree with the Chief Justice in thinking that this perliminary objection fails.

TESTAMENTARY APPLICATION.

June 2, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Coutts.

In the goods of RAM KUMAR PERSHAD, DECEASED.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 19-D—Will—Probate—Hindu testator—Residue devised to son—Court-fee payable.

A member of a Hindu joint family made a Wil which, after providing for his widow and for the endowment of a temple, left the residue to his son. In applying for Probate of the Will it was sought to exclude the property devised to the son from the payment of Court-fees on the ground that the son took by survivorship;

Held, that the exemption claimed could not be granted, and that where a person purports to dispose of property by a Will, those desiring to obtain Probate must pay a full duty leviable on such property. [p. 1008, col. 2.]

Messrs. Banwari Lal and Sundar Lal, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This Court-fee matter arises out of an application for Probate. The testator was a member of a joint family and by his Will, after making provision for his widow and for the endowment of a temple, he has left the residue to his son. The executor, in applying for for Probate, has deducted the value of the residue from the total value of the property on which Court-fee has to be paid and he contends that Court-fee is not payable on this inasmuch as the minor son takes by survivorship. The question is, whether he is entitled to do this under section 19 (D) of the Court Fees Act. Section 19 (D) runs as follows:—"The Probate of the Will or the Letters of Administration of the effects, of any person deceased, heretofore or hereafter granted, shall be deemed valid and available by his executors or administrators for recovering, transferring or assigning any moveable or immoveable property whereof or whereto the deceased was possessed or entitled, either wholly or partially as a trustee, notwithstanding the amount or value of such property is not included in the amount or value of the estate in respect of which a Court-fee was paid on such Probate or Letters of Administration." The effect of this section has been considered by the Calcutta High Court, by the Madras High Court and by the Bombay High Court. The leading case in the Calcutta High Court is Pokurmull Augurwallah, In the goods of (1). In that case, which was a similar case to the present one, it was held that Probate duty was exempted under section 19 (D) of the Court Fees Act. This view, however, has been differed from in both the Madras and the Bombay High Courts. It was pointed out in Dasu Manavala Chetty, In the matter of (2) that the case was not argued in the Calcutta High Court, the suggestion of the Taxing Officer was accepted by the learned Chief Justice and, after a full discussion of the subject, it was held that where a surviving co parcener governed by the Mitakshara Law, applies for Letters of Administration in respect of property standing in the name of a deceased co-parcener which was joint family property of the applicant and the deceased, he is bound to include in the valuation of the property the value of the share to which the deceased was entitled at the moment of his death ; and the reason for the decision, as I understand it, was that, so far as the testator's own share at least was concerned, it could not be held that it was held by the deceased as trustee. In the Bombay High Court the latest case on the point in Kashinath Parashram Gadgil v. Gourabai Mallappa (3). That case is a case on all fours with the present case. In it the decisions of both the Calcutta and the Madras High Courts have been considered, and it has been held that the exemption cannot be allowed. The executors in that case contended that the testator had no beneficial interest in any part of the property devised. The learned Judges, however, pointed out that as each of the co-parceners is entitled to a joint benefit in every part of the undivided estate, it cannot be said that even the least part of the joint family property was held in trust not beneficially by the testator. They further pointed out that those who propound a Will and claim under it can hardly be heard to say that the testator had no powers of beneficial disposition and that, although the devisee under the Will takes only what is his own, if he needs a Will to get it, there is no reason why he should not pay the ordinary duty. The Court granting Probate is not entitled to consider the effect of the Will. The factum of the Will alone can be established in Probate proceedings and it is not for the Court in those proceedings to consider whether the testator had or had not the power to dispose of the property in the Will. If he purports to do so, those desiring to obtain Probate must pay a full duty leviable on such property.

The view which has been taken by the Bombay High Court is, in my opinion, the correct view. I, therefore, direct that the Probate duty in the present case be paid on the value of the property devised to the testator's son.

PATNA HIGH COURT
SUBMITTED (KISHORE)

Account, suit for, against karta—Limitation. See LIMITATION ACT, s. 10 877

——, suit for—Suit compromised—Defendant undertaking to deliver books to plaintiff—Failure to deliver—Order disallowing cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses, legality of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XI, r. 21—Revision—Interlocutory order—Material irregularity—Jurisdiction, want of—High Court, interference by—R. 21, O XI, applicability of—Penalty under rule, nature of—Penalty, when to be imposed.

In a suit for accounts the parties effected a compromise, one of the terms of which was that the defendant would submit to the Court all account-books, deeds and other documents in his possession relating to the property in dispute, in order that they might be made over to the plaintiff, and a decree was passed by consent of the parties in terms of the compromise. The plaintiff applied for execution of this decree so far as it related to the delivery of the documents, and an order was made directing delivery of certain books of account which had not been produced by the defendant. The matter came before the High Court in appeal, and that Court directed, inter alia, that, if the Court was unable from the books already produced to make a satisfactory examination of the accounts, it should call on the defendant to produce the books in question, and on his refusal or failure to do so, should pass a final decree on the materials produced by the plaintiff. On the application of the plaintiff two Commissioners were appointed to examine the accounts. They proceeded to take evidence, and referred to the Court the question whether the books in question should be produced at that stage. The Court made an order for their production, but as they were not produced, the Court, perporting to act under section 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, imposed a fine on the defendant and ordered him to produce the books by a certain date. The fine was paid, and the defendant filed an affidavit to the effect that he could not find the books or get any clue to their whereabouts, and eventually denied that he had got the books The Court thereupon, acting under section 32 b of the Code, ordered the attachment and sale of a village belonging to him The High Court set aside that order on the ground that section 32 did not apply and directed the Court to carry out the previous order of the High Court. The Commissioners proceeded to take evidence and applied to the Court for instructions as to whether they were to record evidence for the defendant, and whether they were to allow him to cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses.

The Court, without stating under what rule of practice or procedure it purported to act, passed an order that there should be no cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses. Against this order the defendant came to the High Court in the present appeal:

Held, that the only provision of law under which an order of the nature of the order complained of could be justified was Order XI, rule 21, of the Civil Procedure Code, but that rule did not apply to the circumstances of the present case, as no order for discovery or inspection of documents had been made therein within the meaning of that rule, and that as there was no rule of practice to justify a Court to deny absolutely to a party the right to cross-examine, the Court acted without jurisdiction and with material irregularity in passing the order.

Held, further, that although the order impeached was not open to appeal, and although the High Court will not interfere, under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, with an interlocutory order unless irreparable injury would be caused to one of the litigants, yet it will interfere with such an order if, as in this case, protracted and costly proceedings, which in the end would be set aside, must result

Obiter:—The penalty imposed by rule 21, Order XI, of the Civil Procedure Code, is of a highly penal nature, and ought only to be used in extreme cases and as a last resort, and should in no case be imposed unless there is a clear failure to comply with the obligation laid down in the rule. When a party who is required to produce documents for inspection definitely swears an affidavit that the documents required are not in his possession or power, the Court should regard this as final and conclusive. Pat RAMESHWAR NARAYAN SINGH v. RIKHANATH KOERI, 5 P. Accused person, who is—Witness discovered to be connected with offence, while giving evidence, whether competent witness.

Where neither in a complaint nor in the Police Challan is mention made of a person as one of those who committed the offence, the examination of such a person as a witness for the prosecution would not vitiate the trial, merely because the Court discovers, for the first time when he gives his evidence, that he might have been prosecuted. N LOCAL GOVERNMENT v. JHAM SINGH, 21 Cr. It would, however, require very strong evidence on the part of a losing party to acquire a fresh title by adverse possession against the decree of a Court and he must act in such a way that the parties

On the 4th January 1916, plaintiff instituted the present suit against the District Board of Manbhum and the Municipality of Purulia claiming damages for personal injury alleged to have been caused by the negligence and breach of duty of one or both of the defendants Plaintiff's case was that, on 5th August 1915, whilst driving along a road his trap struck against a heap of road gravel lying on the side of the road, and owing to the impact he was thrown to the ground and sustained a compound fracture of the right leg: he was treated locally for a few days and on 24th September was removed, under medical advice, to Calcutta for treatment where, on 7th October, his leg was amputated below the knee. The defendants set up pleas in bar by limitation, the District Board relying on section 146 of the Bengal Local Self-Government Act, and the Municipality on section 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act. The Trial Court found that the acts complained of were within the two sections relied on; that the cause of action arose on the 5th August that no fresh cause of action accrued on the 7th October when plaintiff's leg was amputated, and the suit having been instituted after the expiry of three months from the earlier date, it was barred by limitation Plaintiff appealed contending that the act complained of was not anything done under the provisions of the two Acts mentioned, that the cause of action arose on 7th October when his leg was amputated and not on 5th August, and that, in any case, a fresh cause of action arose on 7th October; that section 143 of the Bengal Local Self Government Act did not apply to a suit against the District Board as an incorporated body and was, therefore, no bar The plaintiff conceded that an action aghinst the Municipality was covered by section 363 of the Bengal Municipal Act:

Held, ( ) that as the duty of the defendants in connection with the road arose out of the Statutes themselves, and as it was the omission to perform this duty which gave rise to the cause of action, the negligence relied on by the plaintiff came within the purview of the sections mentioned;

(2) that no fresh cause of action accrued to the plaintiff on the 7th October as the amputation of the limb was merely a development of the original injury the cause of action for which arose at the time the injury was sustained;

(3) that section 146 of the Local Self-Government Act provides the limitation for bringing a suit against the members of any District Board, and that upon a proper construction of the provisions of the Act, that section had no application to a suit against the District Board as a separate legal entity, and that, consequently, as against the District Board,

The object of that section is to conclude once for all the question as to the status of the tenant so far as it rests upon the presumption of twenty years' uniform payment of rent The section does not, however, bar proof of the tenancy from the time of the Permanent Settlement at a fixed rate of rent by any other means, e. g, by the production of the original grant. Pat JANKI KUER v. HIRANAND PANDE 25

Under that clause the landlord is only required to prove the area originally held by the tenant and the excess subsequently found, provided the standard of measurement is the same throughout.

Where a consolidated jama is paid for a particular holding, the subsequent detection of excess area would not entitle the landlord to an increase of rent. If, on the other hand, the rent is paid according to the area, whether that area is arrived at in the beginning by measurement or not, the subsequent detection of any change in the area would entail a corresponding alteration in the rental, whether it be a reduction in favour of the tenant or an enhancement in favour of the landlord. Pat SHEO KUMAR LAL v. RAMPHAL DASS 959

Defendant Municipality, purporting to act under section 92 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, offered plaintiff a certain price for a plot of land or to refer the matter to a Panchayet to fix the price. Plaintiff gave possession of the land, but the parties were unable to agree to the price and plaintiff was referred to the District Court to have the price fixed. Subsequently it was discovered that the defendant's action was not authorised by law and plaintiff brought the present suit to recover possession. The suit was dismissed on the ground that as the plaintiff had agreed to part with the land at a price to be fixed under section 160 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, there was a contract binding on him and that the mistake as to the right of the defendant to act under section 92 of that Act was a mistake of law, which under section 21 of the Contract Act did not invalidate the contract. Plaintiff appealed:

Held, (1) that the mistake of the parties in respect of the right of the defendant to acquire the land was one of fact and, therefore, did not fall under section 21 of the Contract Act;

Bombay District Municipal Act—concld.

(2) that the contract between the parties was merely one for the sale of immoveable property which, under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, did not of itself create any interest in, or charge upon, property;

(3) that the defendant had no power to act under section 92 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, and consequently section 160 of that Act did not apply;

(4) that inasmuch as the price is the essence of a contract of sale and the price in the present case was not ascertainable in the manner contemplated by the parties, there was no price promised within the meaning of section 50 of the Contract Act, there was no valid sale and the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession. S HEMUMAL HARPALMAL v. P., a trader at Agra, had consigned to him by rail, 113 bags of chillies to be delivered at Kasganj. The consignment arrived in a sealed wagon on the 11th May and was ready for unloading on the 13th May: the contract with the Railway expressly provided that the wagon should be unloaded by the consignee. P. arranged with a local firm at Kasganj to take delivery on his behalf and sent them the Railway receipt on 6th or 7th May. R., a servant of this firm, presented himself on the 13th May, without the Railway receipt, and was permitted to unload the wagon, after doing which he left the bags on the Railway premises and went away. He tendered the Railway receipt on the 22nd May and again did not remove the goods. On the 31st May a member of the firm asked to be shown P's. goods. But with the exception of one bag, the remaining bags which made up the consignment were not then on the Railway premises. P. then brought the present suit against the Railway and the consignor for damages for the loss or non-delivery. R. was not produced as a witness, nor was any evidence led to prove that he did not in fact remove the goods, or as to the terms of any arrangement whereby, after unloading the consignment, the bags were allowed to remain on the Railway premises :

Held, (1) that the Railway as carriers could not be made liable for any loss due to the carelessness or neglect of the consignee in not removing the goods within a reasonable time of their arrival at destination ;

(2) that, in the absence of any explanation of the delay between the 13th May when the goods were unloaded and the 22nd May when the Railway receipt was produced, the liability of the Railway as carriers had ceased ;

(3) that, in the absence of evidence, express or implied, of any arrangement with the Railway, there was no liability incurred by the Railway as warehousers, and the mere fact that a charge was made for demurrage would not necessarily give rise to such an implication. A B. Where it is shown that an appeal is pending before His Majesty in Council, an order for stay of a subsequent suit can be made without any reference to the nature of the relief claimed in either suit. It is only necessary that there should be in both suits or in the suit and the appeal some matter which is directly and substantially in issue in both cases.

Plaintiffs obtained a decree in a Civil Court for joint possession of certain lands with defendants execution of which was carried out. Defendants appealed to the Privy Council Subsequently plaintiffs filed a suit to recover profits from the defendants in the Revenue Court. A paramount title cannot be drawn into controversy in an action for foreclosure. At the same time, a puisne mortgagee may make a prior mortgagee a party to the suit. If he does so, the purpose of making the prior mortgagee a party should be clearly stated; but if no purpose is given in the plaint, or provided for in the decree, the prior mortgagee will not be affected by the judgment in any way. Where no relief is claimed, the subject-matter of the action is the interest of the mortgagor minus the interest of the first mortgagee, and in such a suit no investigation as to the validity or extent of the prior mortgage can possibly be made. The objection was disallowed by the executing Court but was upheld on appeal. Subsequently, the High Court set aside the order allowing the objection of the judgment-debtor. The decree-holder, thereupon, made an application to the Bhagalpore Court to proceed with the execution. The Court sent for the record from the Benares Court and proceeded with the execution:

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Under section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code of 190 the title of the real purchaser of a property at a sale in execution of a decree cannot be enforced against the certified purchaser as also against persons who claim a title derived from the certified purchaser. Under section 317 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, however, the real purchaser had a title enforceable against the whole world except the certified purchaser.

The wider restriction embodied by the Legislature in section 66 of the Code of 1908 cannot be applied to cases where the title of the real purchaser accrued under the Code of 1882 and was, at the time of its inception, subject only to the restriction contained in section 317 of that Code. Therefore, if the title of an execution-purchaser was perfected when section 317 of the Code of 1882 was in force, the real purchaser, notwithstanding the passing of the new Code of 908, is entitled to maintain a suit against a transferee of the certified purchaser for a declaration that as the certified purchaser was not the real purchaser, his transferee has not acquired any title under his conveyance. C PROMOTHA NATH v. SOURAV DASI, 81 C. Where the decree of a Trial Court is reversed on appeal and the Appellate Court, in the exercise of its inherent power remands the case to the Trial Court for a fresh decision, no appeal lies against the order of remand as such, inasmuch as the order does not fall within the purview of Order XLIII, rule 1 (4) of the Civil Procedure Code, but an appeal lies from the decree of the Appellate Court reversing the decree of the Trial Court.

Under Order XVIII, rule 18 of the Civil Procedure Code a Judge has power to visit a locality and to use the result of his local inspection for certain purposes, e. g. for the purpose of enabling him to understand the questions that are being raised, to follow the evidence to apply it, and to test it, and, although it is desirable that he should place the result of his local inspection on the record, yet the omission to do so is a purely formal defect and would not necessarily vitiate his judgment. Pat RAM CHANDRA RAO v. NARAYAN LAL 909

A Court adjourned a case to the 25th March 1918 for the purpose of pronouncing judgment: on that date a decree for pre-emption was granted coupled with the condition that unless the requisite pre-emption-money was paid within one month the decree would become void. Payment was not made within the time fixed, but on the 7th June 1918 the decree-holder made a representation to the Court that he was not aware that judgment had been pronounced and asked for permission to pay the money: the officer who passed the decree having been transferred, his successor, while admitting that he had no power to extend the time for payment, came to the conclusion that judgment had not been pronounced on the 25th March 1918, although the record showed that on that date parties' Counsel were present, he accordingly, on the 2nd December 1918, proceeded to pronounce judgment, already signed and dated by his predecessor:

Held, that under Order III, rules 1 and 4 of the Civil Procedure Code notice to Counsel was sufficient, that there was no reason for holding that judgment had not been pronounced on the 25th March 1918, and that the Court acted without jurisdiction in pronouncing, for the second time, a judgment recorded and dated by his predecessor. The words "any party" in Order XXI, rule 103, of the Civil Procedure Code refer to any party to the petition, and not to the decree under execution.

Appellant purchased certain property at a Court sale held in execution of a money decree. After the attachment but before sale, a mortgage suit was filed in respect of that property. Subsequently a decree for sale was passed in the mortgage suit and the respondent purchased the property in execution of that decree. The attaching creditor was not impleaded in the mortgage suit:

Held, that the respondent was entitled to oust the appellant as the latter's purchase was pendente lite.

Per Oldfield, J—Neither section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act nor Order XXXIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, confers on an attaching creditor any interest in the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property. they are merely statutory provisions for his right to redeem and to be impleaded in proceedings on the mortgage. Independently of these provisions and as an attaching creditor he obtains no interest in the property and nothing to which any equity in his favour founded on the infringement of those provisions could be annexed, or which could pass from him to the purchaser at the sale held at his instance or which he could, after he had purchased himself, rely on as improving his title.

Section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act does not invalidate a sale held pendente lite but only subjects the property in the purchaser's hands to the decree in which the pending litigation may end, as though no transfer had taken place

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The right which an attaching creditor possesses of suing to redeem is not an interest in property.

The principle underlying section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable to a person who, with knowledge that a suit is pending relating to the property, deliberately ignores such a suit and purchases the property. M VEYINDRAMUTHU PILLAI v. MAYA NADAN, (1920) M. Companies Act—contd.

A creditor presented a winding-up petition against a company under section 163 (i) of the Companies Act The company thereupon made an application to remove the winding-up petition from the file of the Court and for stay of all proceedings in connection therewith, on the ground that the winding-up petition was an abuse of the process of the Court and also on the ground that the winding-up petition was presented by the creditor with an ulterior object, viz, to put pressure on the company to accept terms of settlement in a litigation which was pending between the company and the creditor. At the time of these applications two suits were already pending between the company and the creditor for the enforcement of the claim of each against the other The Court of first instance dismissed the application of the company for the removal of the winding-up petition of the creditor from the file of the Court, but directed that the company would be at liberty to appeal against the order of dismissal under certain terms:

Held, (1) that having regard to the terms of the order giving effect to the judgment, an appeal was competent against the judgment under clause 15 of the Letters Patent;

(2) that the learned Judge was not right in dismissing the company's application in toto:

(3) that the proper order to be made, under the circumstances of the case, would be that the winding-up proceedings be stayed until the determination of the two suits between the company and the creditor.

When a company is solvent and there is ground for supposing that there is a bona fide dispute as to a substantial part of the debt on which a winding-up petition is based under section 163 (1) of the Companies Act, the proper course for the creditor is to file a suit and not to make an application under section 163 i).

It is a well-recognised principle that the Court has inherent jurisdiction to stay proceedings when they amount to an abuse of its process.

When a debt is bona fide disputed by a debtor company, it cannot be said to have "neglected to pay" the debt within the meaning of section 163 (i) of the Companies Act. C THE COMPANY v. RAMESWAR SNGH, 23 C. W. N. 844 561

After his death, a dispute arose between his eldest son and his widow as to their respective rights under the Will and the deed of gift. The dispute was compromised, and a certain portion of the property was given to the son, the rest being allotted to the widow. The son executed a deed of relinquishment that he and his heirs would have no claim to the property allotted to the widow. The latter executed a similar deed of relinquishment :

P. had an agreement in his favour for sale of certain mica mines and, in pursuance thereof, a deed of sale was executed but not registered as he could not find the entire amount of the consideration money. He then entered into negotiations with D, with respect to the mines and two letters were exchanged between the parties on 4th February 1907. P. in his letter to D said that he was unable to work the business and agreed that D. should buy the property and carry on the business and undertook to get a conveyance in his favour, and stipulated that D. should bear all the expenses, carry on the business and pay P. a 2-anna share out of the profits, and concluded by saying that, as soon as D. paid the owner of the property, he should execute a Kararnama embodying these conditions. D, in his letter to P., referred to the terms as to the agreement between the parties, and added that if he failed to execute the Kararnama by a certain date he would give up all his rights in the property under these documents Thereafter there was a conveyance of the property in favour of D. by the owner and P, in which it was recited that the transaction between P. and the owner had fallen through. The Kararnama was not executed. So P. in 1910 instituted a suit claiming that he was the sole owner of the mines In his written statement D claimed that he was the owner absolute of the property that P. had no rights in the business either as owner or as partner, and that as P had failed to carry out the arrangement as to the Kararnama he had lost his 2-anna share. P. adduced no evidence and failed to appear, whereupon the suit was dismissed. P. then applied for restoration and for permission to amend the plaint by adding a prayer in the alternative that D. be directed to execute the Kararnama The suit was restored, but the amendment was refused. In 19 4 P. withdrew the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. In 1916 P. instituted the present suit for a declaration that he was a partner with D. for accounts and for his share of the profits :—

Held, (1) that there was a partnership created between the parties on 4th February 1907, and that the constitution of that partnership was not made conditional or contingent on the execution of the Kararnama ;

(2) that the partnership was dissolved as the effect of the repudiation contained in the pleadings of the parties in the suit of 19 0 ;

(3) that the present suit, having been brought more than six years after the dissolution of the partnership, it was barred under Article 120, Schedule I to the Limitation Act ;

(4) that the present suit was not maintainable by virtue of Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code as P.'s cause of action in both the suit of 1910 and the present suit, was based on the contract of partnership contained in the letters of 4th February 1907, and as in the previous suit the relief claimed by him was that his right to the property might be established it was not now open to him to claim relief on the basis that he was a partner with D and entitled to a 2-anna share M AMALUR VENKAYYA NAIDU v. VISSA LAKSHMINARASAYYA 969

Plaintiff, a German firm trading in Bombay engaged the defendants as guarantee brokers and Muccadums, the latter depositing, by way of guarantee, Rs 50,000, with the branch of the firm at Bombay. Between the 15th and 23rd July 1914, the firm contracted to purchase from defendants certain bales of cotton for forward delivery. The political atmosphere in Europe at that time having created uneasiness in the market, the defendants on the 3rd August 1914 demanded repayment of their security deposit, and on the same day the sum of Rs. 40,000 was paid to them, and as regards the balance, they were informed that it was impossible to draw money from Europe. War broke out at 11 P. M. on the 4th August between Great Britain and Germany. On the 5th August the plaintiffs, through their manager at Bombay, entered into an agreement with the defendants recording the pledge of 797 bales of cotton blankets as security for the balance of the deposit and the differences on the forward cotton contracts. On the 27th August certain cotton bales were pledged to defendants as further security, and on the 3rd September the forward cotton contracts were closed by cross-contracts. The manager of the firm was interessed on the 5th September and the affairs of the firm at Bombay placed in charge of a Liquidator, who, in 1915, entered into an agreement with the defendants for the sale of the cotton blankets and of the cotton, the terms of which were that defendants were to sell the blankets and repay themselves out of the sale-proceeds, and that the Liquidator was to sell the cotton and give the defendants a first charge on the sale-proceeds for any balance remaining due to them after taking credit for the sale-proceeds of the blankets Both sales were effected, but as the sale-proceeds of the blankets were insufficient to satisfy the amount due to the defendants, they in February-March 19 6 made a demand on the Liquidator for payment of the balance out of the sale-proceeds of the cotton. In April 19 6, the Liquidator repudiated this agreement, demanded the sale-proceeds of the blankets, less Rs. 10,000 and certain other charges, and declined to pay anything out of the sale-proceeds of the cotton After some further correspondence between the parties the Liquidator, on the th August 1917, brought the present suit to recover from the defendants the sale-proceeds of the blankets, less Rs. 10,000, shop rent and wages, on the grounds—

(1) that the pledge, being a transaction for the benefit of an enemy, was void; and

(2) that the contracts for the purchase of cotton became void on the outbreak of war, and the subsequent pledge and setting off of forward contracts were of no legal effect.

The defendants counter-claimed to recover from the sale-proceeds of the cotton the amount of the balance due to them. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit and decreed the counter-claim. On appeal by the plaintiffs:

Held, that the plaintiffs' suit had been rightly dismissed and the defendants' counter-claim rightly decreed: that the agreements entered into by the Liquidator with the defendants were "contracts" within the meaning of the Contract Act and could not be avoided under section 21 of that Act as being made under any mistake of law, and payments made to the defendants were payments under these binding contracts and could not be recovered under section 72 of the Act. B WOLF & SONS v DADIBA KHARMJI & Co., 21 BOM L. Under a contract entered into between the plaintiff firm and defendant No. 1 the latter was appointed their sub-agent for the sale of certain goods on commission on the price of the goods sold. He was in addition to get all his office expenses Defendant No. 2 undertook to indemnify the firm against all losses, damages and expenses whatsoever they might suffer by reason or in consequence of any default on the part of the sub-agent: he "expressly waived all or any of the rights as surety which may at any time be inconsistent herewith and which he might be otherwise entitled to claim and enforce" and agreed that "the guarantee shall not be revocable by him at any time, but shall continue during the employment of the sub-agent." Subsequently, without the knowledge or consent of defendant No. 2 the terms of the sub-agency were varied, the variation being that the sub-agent would receive commission at a higher rate inclusive of all office expenses. The question was whether the variation had the effect of discharging the surety from all subsequent liability:

Held, that the variation amounted to a variation of the terms of the original contract, and, as it was made without the knowledge or consent of defendant No. 2, under section 133 of the Contract Act the variation involved the result of absolving him from liability as surety in respect of transactions subsequent to the variation. B CHITGUPPI & Co. v. VINAYAK KASHINATH KHADILKAR, 24 BOM. L. R. 659 184

A sub-partner should ordinarily accept the accounts of profits agreed upon between the partners, but he is entitled to accounts after winding-up and arrangements between the principal partners after dissolution cannot be enforced against the sub-partner Section 32 of the English Partnership Act should be applied in determining the rights and obligations of sub-partners in India

The assignor stands in the position of agent or trustee for the assignee and any settlement of accounts made by him prior to dissolution and up to the date of dissolution is binding in the same manner on the assignee as on the assignor. But, just as and to the extent that the assignor can surcharge and falsify on the ground of mistake or fraud in the settlement, the assignee may also do so. In arriving at a decision in a case under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the question is not whether the evidence for the defence outweighs the evidence for the prosecution but whether the evidence for the prosecution is sufficient to establish the case against the accused and the Court ought to come to a definite finding on that point. C SADAT ALI v. EMPEROR, 21 CR. Evidence of personal opinions as to the character of an accused person in inquiries under section 117 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is inadmissible.

Every man is conscious as to what his general reputation is and by necessary association of ideas he is also conscious of the limited or the extensive circle, as the case may be, within which his reputation generally exists. The opinion held by the body of persons within that circle as to his character is his "general repute." Evidence which discloses the opinion of such persons collectively is, therefore, evidence in proof of general reputation.

Evidence of general repute is evidence of a fact which could be heard, and evidence of only such witnesses is admissable who say that they heard the general reputation of the accused to be so and so Evidence, therefore, which only repeats what the witnesses heard from some specified individuals will be purely hearsay and as such inadmissible. C ASHIQ ALI v EMPEROR, 23 C. When a party has been declared to be in possession as a result of proceedings under section 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code, fresh proceedings under that section cannot be started against him unless it can be shown that the order has been either vacated in due course of law or possession has been surrendered amicably. Applicants were convicted of being concerned in the forgery of an unregistered mortgage bond, upon proceedings started against them on the petition of a Police Inspector, which stated, inter alia, that they together with one S were members of a gang and had jointly fabricated the bond. J., one of the applicants, had instituted a suit on the bond and the sanction of the Civil Court was necessary to his prosecution. The Police Inspector promised S. a pardon and his evidence was taken on oath by the Civil Court and the prosecution of J sanctioned. S. was never arrested, nor brought to trial in the Criminal Court, nor were any steps taken to give him a conditional pardon under section 337, Criminal Procedure Code. It was objected that S should have been placed before the Magistrate as an accused, that his evidence was inadmissible that the promise of pardon to him, not being in accordance with section 337 of the Code, was illegal and that his evidence was irrelevant under section 24 of the Evidence Act:

Held, that although in view of section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code, S could have been tried jointly with the applicants or separately, yet the fact that he was not so tried did not make him a co-accused with the applicants, and his competency as a witness could not be questioned, as he did not answer to the description of an accused person in the trial, although he may have been converted illegally into a witness but,

2. that inasmuch as in the complaint S was described as having assisted in the preparation of the fabricated bond, the Magistrate was bound, under section 344 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to issue process against him, and his failure to do so, or to proceed separately against him, seriously prejudiced the applicants, and consequently vitiated the whole proceedings. N GOVINDA SAMBHUJI v EMPEROR, 6 N. ——— Succession—Daughter versus Collaterals—Acquired property, what is

Daughters are generally preferred to collaterals in regard to the acquired property of their father, and by acquired property is meant property not necessarily acquired by the father himself but property acquired by him or any of his ascendants short of the common ancestor.

The agnatic theory reposes on the principle that collaterals descended from the common ancestor derive their title from that common ancestor, but when the common ancestor had no interest in the property in dispute his descendants derive from him no more right than he had, i. e, they acquire no right. Her application was granted, but thereafter on the application of S the Court directed sale of both properties, subject to the charges claimed by K, The rights, title and interest of B in the property subject to the charges were put up for sale and were purchased by the plaintiff who, on the death of K, sued for partition claiming a one-fourth share, which represented the interest of K. B and his brother M. contended that there was no attachment of the property and that, therefore, the sale was void The trial Court, holding that the sale was valid, decreed the claim, but on appeal by M. this decision was reversed on the ground that the sale was void because there was no subsisting attachment. On second appeal:

Held, that the executing Court having treated the attachment as being still in force when it ordered the property to be sold there was a sufficient attachment, that the sale was not void, and that, consequently, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree B VAIKUNT SHRIDHAR BHATTA v. Execution of decree—contd.

Where there is a provision in a decree for the benefit of the judgment-debtor and he fails to take advantage of the benefit which is provided for him, he loses that benefit and the decree automatically becomes a decree of the ordinary type which does not offer that benefit

A decree provided for the payment of a certain sum by way of interest every year, and for the payment of the principal on the expiration of twenty-five years, but if the interest was not paid in any year, then the principal and interest could be recovered at once in one sum For several years there was default in the payment of interest and both parties continued to believe that the original decree still subsisted. Eventually the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree for principal and interest purporting to take advantage of the last default in the payment of interest:

Held, that the parties must be taken to have mutually condoned and wiped out all previous defaults and that the legal position was that there had been only one default which was the subject-matter of the application and that, therefore, the decree-holder was entitled to recover the principal and one year's interest B AMRIT KHANDERAO v. A fresh applicatoin for execution was made against H but he objected that he had gifted the estate to his mother, who had sold it and the purchaser objected that he was not liable and his objection was allowed. A then brought the present suit claiming to be entitled to put the property to sale in execution of his decree. The trial Court held that H. was personally liable but that his transferees were not as the execution having been struck off the attachment ceased to be effective and the transfer made by him as valid, the High Court reversed this finding on appeal and held that the attachment had not ceased to be effective, and consequently the transfer by H. was void, and decreed the suit A. again applied for execution, and H again raised the same objection which he had previously raised and his objection was allowed On appeal by A

The father died while E was still in the service of the Bank. Inasmuch as a Hindu has no such power of alienation over ancestral land as would affect the rights of an adopted son, unless the alienation was made for necessity, an attempted alienation by Will to take effect on a certain contingency, expected to occur after an adopted son comes into existence subsequent to the death of the testator, is void and cannot be enforced.

A Hindu, by his Will, directed his senior widow to adopt a son to him after his death, and, in the event of disagreement between his senior and junior widows on the one hand and the adopted son on the other, he directed that the junior widow should be given 5 acres of land. In a suit by the junior widow for the 15 acres:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, in the absence of an agreement with the adoptive boy's natural father, that the adoption was made subject to the adopted son's liability to give the 15 acres to plaintiff on demand;

Plaintiff brought the present suit for separate possession by partition of a half share in certain properties against his step-brother, defendant No. 1, who was the manager of the family. In this suit he impleaded as defendants a large number of transferees of defendant No. 1, of whom the present appellant was one. The appellant's defence was that when defendant No. 1, purchased the property of which the appellant was the transferee, defendant No. 1 was not a member of the joint Hindu family with the plaintiff and that, therefore, the plaintiff could not have that property partitioned. In the plaint the plaintiff alleged that he and defendant No 1 were members of a joint Hindu family, that the plaintiff had lived separately for the last nine years, that the immoveable property of the joint family was not divided between them and that he now wanted to obtain a partition of everything through Court

Held, (1) that in view of the pleadings, the true nature of the suit was for a de facto division and not for a division of title which had already taken place about nine years ago and the plaintiff could not, therefore, rely on the ordinary presumption of jointness;

(2) that the appellant not being a member of the family but an utter stranger to it and being in possession of the property in dispute, the plaintiff must establish his title independently of any presumptions before he could hope to succeed in ejecting appellant;

(3) that the property in dispute having been acquired by defendant No. 1 after the division, between him and the plaintiff, it was his separate property and the plaintiff had no title to it. O SHEO DAYAL v. LALTA PRASAD, 23 O. C. 184; 7 O. L. J. 565 608

——— ——— Manager, power of, to transfer family property—Necessity or antecedent debt, absence of, effect of—Transferee, duty of.

Actual compelling necessity is not the sole test of the validity of a conveyance or mortgage of the family estate by the manager acting without the express consent of the other members. If without proving actual necessity in the ordinary sense of the term, it can be shown that the transaction was one which was clearly beneficial to the interests of the family as a whole, the transaction would be within the manager's authority, and the consent of the other members would be implied although not expressly given In either case, however, the onus is upon the alienee or mortgagee to prove that the transaction was for the interest of the family as being either necessary or beneficial.

The mere fact that money is borrowed to enable the manager to purchase immoveable property on behalf of the family does not in itself create any presumption that the transaction was beneficial to the family, so as to authorise the manager to hypothecate existing family property by way of security for the loan. Some necessity for the transaction or some benefit resulting to the family therefrom must in all such cases be shown.

In the absence of proof of necessity or antecedent debt a mortgage of property belonging to a Mitakshara family by its karta is void, and the transaction itself gives to the mortgagee no right against the karta's interest in the property. Pat RAM BILAS SINGH v. RAMYAD SINGH, 1 P. ——— ——— Mortgage by one member of family, whether binding on others—Necessity and antecedent debt, absence of—Mortgagee, position and remedies of—Partition—Intention to separate, proof of.

A mortgage of the whole or a share of the joint family property of a Mitakshara family by one member of the family, unless justified by legal necessity or by an antecedent debt or assented to by the other members of the family is void and inoperative as against the property hypothecated and gives the mortgagee no rights even against the mortgagor's undivided share. Where, however, the mortgagor's interest has been separated from that of the other members of the family actual partition by metes and bounds not being essential for this purpose, or where the share has by legal process been attached or sold at the instance of the creditor it may become available as security for the mortgage-debt. In special circumstances, where the property has already passed into the hands of the mortgagee, the Court, if satisfied that the equities of the case require it, may, in its discretion, set aside the alienation upon the terms that the property when restored shall be held in separate shares, the share of the mortgagor being subject to a lien for the mortgage-debt and interest.

An intention on the part of a mortgagor of family property to separate from the rest of the family cannot, however, be inferred from the terms of the mortgage-bond itself where it purports to hypothecate only the mortgagor's interest in the family property. Pat AMARDAYAL SINGH v HAR PERSHAD SAHU, 1 P. Hindu Law—contd.

A mortgage by one member of a joint Hindu family of property belonging to the family is not void altogether, but is voidable at the instance of the persons whose rights are invaded by it.

In a mortgage suit the managers of a joint family effectively represent the interests of the members of the family.

The ordinary rule is that a man having a right to act in either of two ways shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest. Therefore, the mere fact of a charge having been paid off does not decide the question whether it is extinguished. It depends on the intention of the mortgagee and where it is manifestly to his advantage to keep it alive, equity ought not to destroy it.

It is desirable that when petitions raising important questions of fact or of law are presented before a Court, the Court should proceed to deal with such petitions. The failure to do so may, in many cases, involve a remand, which is always undesirable. Pat BAIJ NATH GOENKA v. DALEEP NARAIN SINGH, (1920) PAT. 261; 1 P. L T 582 489

In fixing the rate of maintenance to be awarded to a Hindu widow, the amount of stridhan possessed by her should be taken into consideration.

The right of a Hindu widow to claim maintenance is dependent on her remaining chaste, and she is liable to forfeit that right by subsequent acts of unchastity, and the existence of an agreement or of a decree securing maintenance to her would afford her no protection from such forfeiture. But a repentant widow may not be absolutely aban-

In a suit against a Hindu widow for the discontinuance of an allowance secured to her as maintenance under a decree, on the ground of her unchastity, the widow can only succeed if she can show not only that at the time of the plaint she was leading a chaste life, but also that she had done so for a considerable period previously, so as to lead to the conclusion that she has completely renounced her immoral course, and is a reformed woman. N LAKSHMIBAI v. VISVANATHA RAO, 16 N. Negotiations, in the meantime, were resumed, and an offer was made to the Company to take the premises for Rs 1,45,517-12-0. After this offer was made, the Government issued a notification, under the Land Acquisition Act, for the acquisition of the property. The Directors of the Company resolved to accept the offer and, through their Secretary, informed the Engineer of the Corporation that "the Company was willing to accept without prejudice the sum of Rs. 1,45,517-12-0" for the property, and this was approved by the Municipal Commissioner. A meeting was held before the Collector, and the agreement was recorded. Subsequently, the Company withdrew the offer made, and put in a claim for Rs. 5,71,620 as compensation for compulsory iqcsuiation. The Municipal Corporation thereupon brought the present suit for a declaration that there was a contract binding on the Company and that the Company was not entitled in the proceedings before the Collector to any sum in excess of Rs. 1,45,617-12-0. The Company contended that there was no contract between the parties; that their letter to the Municipal Engineer was not a proposal as to what they were willing to accept but was an invitation to the Corporation to make a proposal on terms which the Company were prepared to deal with; that if there was an agreement it was void and of no effect; and that neither party was bound by it. The trial Court decreed the claim for the declaration prayed for and the Company appealed:

Held, that the claim had been rightly decreed: that there was an agreement binding on the Company as to the amount of the compensation to be paid for their premises; that the Municipal Corporation were entitled to make such an agreement before he Collector had made his award, and that the agreement could be specifically enforced against the Company. B FORT PRESS CO, LTD. v. MUNICIPAL CORPORATION OF BOMBAY, 21 BOM. Landlord and tenant—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), applicability of, to non-agricultural tenancy—Ejectment—Notice to quit—Matters to be ascertained—Rent paid annually—Tenancy, whether annual.

Where a tenancy is created for purposes other than agriculture, the tenant is not a cultivator and, consequently, not an under-raiyat or raiyat within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act and his liability to ejectment does not depend upon the provisions of that Act.

In determining whether a notice served upon a tenant to quit is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff in an ejectment suit to a decree, the nature of the tenancy and whether it is a terminable tenancy must first be ascertained.

Proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act are summary proceedings and they are not proper proceedings to try a Pleader for what are in reality grave criminal charges.

There is ample jurisdiction in a Court to investigate cases of moral turpitude unconnected with the discharge by a practitioner of his professional duty. But the case of a suitor stands on a different footing, though the suitor be a Pleader or a Mukhtear.

A judgment was altered at the instance of one of the defendants. The other defendants questioned the propriety of this alteration by means of an application for revision, and, after dismissal of this application, they filed the present appeal against the decree following upon the altered judgment. The appeal, however, was filed beyond time counting the period from the date of the decree, but was within time if the period was reckoned from the date of the dismissal of the application for revision :

Held, that, as the matter was one about which more views than one were possible, and the appellants might reasonably have been in doubt as to the course they should pursue, the delay in filing the appeal was excusable. O HEWLETT v. BEHARI LAL, 6 O. L. J 662 995

In order to prove that there was interference with the rights of an adopted son within the meaning of

The mere fact that a person shares an erroneous belief with other persons does not give rise to estoppel.

More than six years but less than twelve years after the death of S his widow brought a suit to recover the estate left by S on the ground that V was not entitled to succeed to it:

(2) that the mere fact that the widow of S shared an erroneous belief with V that the latter was entitled to succeed to the estate left by S did not estop the widow from bringing the suit.

A market franchise or a right to hold a market, conferred by grant from the Crown does not exist in Bengal, nor can such right be acquired by prescription, the right to hold a market being treated as incident to the ownership of land. The proprietor of a market has no monopoly or privilege which is entitled to protection and no immunity from competition and the mere fact that his profits are diminished by the establishment of a market in proximity to his gives him no remedy at law.

It is not unlawful for a trader who has habitually used a market for the sale of his goods, to take his goods to another market.

The employment of illegal means, however, in the nature of intimidation and physical compulsion to induce traders to attend a rival market newly established, and so interfering with the peaceful enjoyment of the owner of the old market, hitherto patronised by the traders, entitles the latter to a civil remedy by way of a suit for damages but he is not entitled to an injunction restraining his rival from holding a market on any specified day. C HEM CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY v KRISTO CHANDRA SAHA SARDAR, 24 C. Various other sums were paid and were apportioned in the same way Eventually, the mortgagee brought the present suit to recover the unpaid debt plus interest:

Five successive defaults were committed and the mortgagee sued for foreclosure, alleging that the whole mortgage money had become payable. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the mortgagee was not entitled to call in the whole of the mortgage-money The mortgagee then brought the present suit for a personal decree for recovery of the instalments in arrear, and the question was whether the cause of action was the same in both suits and whether the suit was maintainable:

Held, that the suit was maintainable as in the former suit the mortgagee was seeking to enforce the mortgage while in the present suit he was asking only for instalments which had fallen due. N RAIBHAN v. RAOJI, 16 N. L. R. 138 18 from K and sought in execution to realize the whole of the decretal amount by the sale of half of village P. which was still owned by T. It was objected that as the real purchaser of the mortgaged property was M, and as he was himself interested in that property and had acquired the decree, the decree had become incapable of execution It was found that the real purchaser was M and the Appellate Court held that he must give credit for the proportionate part of the decretal amount which was a charge on the property purchased by himself M. appealed and it was urged on his behalf that a mortgagee is entitled to realize the whole of the mortgage-debt from any part of the mortgaged property he likes, and that the execution Court was not competent to go behind the decree and consider the question of apportionment which must be left to be determined in a subsequent contribution suit:

Held, that as M. had become owner of the equity of redemption in the bulk of the mortgaged property and had also acquired the whole of the mortgage decree, the legal effect of these devolutions of interest was an extinguishment of his decree pro tanto: that it was not open to him to realize the whole of the decree from the remainder of the property, and that as the vesting of the equity of redemption in a mortgagee was tantamount to a discharge or satisfaction of the mortgage-debt, an execution Court was competent to recognize it and could go into the question of the extent to which the decree had been satisfied. A SARJU KUMAR MUKERJI v. THAKUR PRASAD, 2 U. It is immaterial whether the partition is made by the Revenue Authorities, or by the Civil Court, or by arbitration, or by private arrangement, and it is not necessary that the mortgagee should

If the partition is tainted with fraud or if in making the partition the encumbrance is taken into account and the partition is made subject to the encumbrance, the result will be different: but in the absence of fraud or the circumstance mentioned above, the mortgagee's remedy is against the share or property which the mortgagor has obtained under the partition. No accounts were rendered of what was received by the mortgagee from or in respect of any of the property. N. brought the present suit to recover the principal and interest due under the several mortgages by sale of the mortgaged properties:

——— Redemption—Clog on equity of redemption—Agreement subsequent to mortgage conveying portion of equity of redemption to mortgagee, validity of

It is a principle of equity that a mortgagor can be relieved from any clog which has been placed on the equity of redemption. Therefore, if the original document of mortgage contains a clause that if the mortgage money is not repaid at the end of the mortgage period, the mortgagor should be foreclosed, that clause would not be specifically enforced against the mortgagor, and he would still be entitled in spite of it to redeem. But there is nothing to prevent the mortgagor and mortgagee from coming to an arrangement after the mortgage has been executed whereby the mortgage is paid off.

Where a mortgage-deed provided that if after the lapse of twenty years the mortgage-debt should not be paid off, then half the mortgage property was to become the absolute property of the mortgagee, and the other half was to return to the mortgagor as his absolute property free from the mortgage, and considerably more than twenty years afterwards the parties entered into an agreement whereby half the property went to the mortgagee as owner and the other half was obtained by the mortgagor free from the mortgage:

Held, that the agreement, being a transaction independent of the mortgage, could not be held invalid as a clog upon the equity of redemption. B SHANKAR DHONDEV v. RAGHUNATH GAITONDE, 22 BOM. L. R 965 384

Held, that the mortgage was a good mortgage for the amount of consideration actually paid and that B was entitled to possession on payment by him of that portion of the consideration which was left with him.

Held, that the hundi was not an ambiguous document within the meaning of section 17 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, nor was it a bill of exchange: it was a promissory note and was governed by the provisions of that Act relating to a negotiable instrument in that form, and that both the drawer and the indorser were liable jointly and severally for half the amount, and the indorser alone was liable for the remainder.

Hundis are negotiable instruments written in some oriental language, being sometimes bills of exchange, and at others promissory notes, and and subject to local usages, and these usages are unaffected by the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act In a suit based on a hundi, the first essential is, whether the hundi is a promissory note or a bill of exchange; if it is a promissory note, the provisions of that Act relating to bills of exchange ought not to be applied; if it is neither one nor the other, the Act cannot be applied, the case being governed by the general law of contract.

The Negotiable Instruments Act deals only with promissory notes and bills of exchange and the distinction between these instruments is that in a promissory note the executant promises himself to pay, in a bill of exchange he directs another to pay and the person liable is the responsible executant who has signed it and not he who has scribed it for execution by another N RADHA KISAN v. HIRALAL 313 and was presented to the drawee on the 7th, who refused acceptance and the bill was returned to the plaintiff bank on the 20th August, who gave notice of dishonour on the 21st to the defendants. The remaining 19 bills arrived in London on the 14th August, they were presented for acceptance the same day, but were returned dishonoured on the 17th August On the 29th October 1914 all the bills were presented to the defendants for payment, and payment having been refused, the present suit was brought to recover on the dishonoured bills. The trial Court decreed the claim and the defendants appealed:

Held, that the bills were foreign instruments, and as they were made payable in a different place from that in which they were made and endorsed, under section 135 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, the Law of England determined what constituted dishonour and what notice of dishonour was sufficient; that having regard to the outbreak of war and the King's Proclamation against trading with the enemy and having regard to the nature of the contracts, the drawees were under no obligation to the drawers to accept the bills

Under section 50 (2), clause (iv) of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, where there is no obligation on the drawee to accept a bill, notice of dishonour is unnecessary, and as under section 42 of that Act the giving of notice of dishonour is an important part of the "treatment" referred to in that section, where such notice of dishonour becomes unnecessary the mere fact that bills are left with the drawee more than the customary time, is no bar to a suit by an indorsee from recovering on the bills. C SUKHLALL CHANDANMULL v. EASTERN BANK, LTD, 46 C. 584 641

Subsequently in 1910 he obtained a decree against B. for arrears, of rent, and took steps to have him ejected under section 61 of the Oudh Rent Act, and obtained and ex parte order for possession in 1911. B. died and his son brought a suit in the Rent Court under section 108 of the Oudh Rent Act to contest the ejectment, which was dismissed. Thereupon he brought a civil suit to be restored to possession of the holding:

Held, that the order of the Rent Court of 1893 was adverse to the Taluqdar, and as B's possession was not disturbed till after the lapse of more than 18 years from the first certain date on which the Talukdar had notice of hostile title, the dispossession of B. was illegal, as at the time when the order of ejectment was obtained B. had acquired the status of an under-proprietor by adverse possession.

In a suit for partition of the whole family property the plaintiff is not bound to file with the plaint such a complete and exhaustive list of all the property as not to exclude any item however small. If a defendant raises the plea that some part of the joint family property has been excluded, it is for him to specify such properties and show that they belong to the family and have been wrongly excluded. Where such an objection is taken, and the plaintiff expresses his willingness to include the properties which, it is suggested, also form part of the joint family property, the suit should not be dismissed on the technical ground that, when it was first brought, these items had not been included in the plaint. It is the duty of the Court to see that justice is done, and an application for amendment, even if made at a late stage, should be allowed. A AMIR CHAND v. LAKSHMI CHAND, 18 A. L. J. 869; 2 U. Where in a suit for redemption the case set up by the defendant is that the transaction was a sham which was not intended to have any legal effect, but was, for the purpose of defeating a threatened claim to pre-emption, drawn up in order to mask a transaction of sale already completed, a finding that the transaction was intended to take effect as a sale cannot be sustained, as such finding, in effect, sets up a case that was not advanced by the defendant.

It is not open to a plaintiff in a redemption suit to put forward a case of clog merely upon the ground that a high rate of interest has been stipulated for in the mortgage-deed, nor, in the absence of any proof of undue influence or unfair dealing in the stipulation for interest, would the plaintiff be entitled to any relief on this head.

In a redemption suit the defendant is entitled to raise the plea that the deed of mortgage in suit is a fictitious document intended to cover a previously completed transaction of sale between the parties, and, under the first proviso to section 92 of the Evidence Act, to prove any facts which would invalidate the deed. O SAHEB BAKHSH SINGH v. MOHAMMAD ALI, 7 O. Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 32, 33, 61—Registration of power-of-attorney—Executant ill—Procedure—Execution before Registrar, whether necessary—Presentation—Courts, duty of.

It is the duty of the Courts in India not to allow the imperative provisions of the Registration Act to be defeated, when it is proved that an agent who presents a document for registration has not been duly authorised in the manner prescribed in the Act to present it.

When a person is ill and unable to attend at the proper registration office to present a power-of-attorney for registration, execution in the presence of the Registrar is not necessary; all the Registrar has to do in such a case is to satisfy himself that the power-of-attorney has been voluntarily executed.

Where a power-of-attorney was presented for registration by an unauthorised person, who stated that the executant was ill and deposited the fee for the Registrar to visit the executant or issue a commission for his examination to ascertain if the power-of-attorney had been voluntarily executed, and the Registrar visited the executant at his house, who admitted execution and requested that after registration the power-of-attorney be given to his attorney:

Held, that the executant was the person who desired the document to be registered and was the real presenter. P C BHARAT INDU v. MOHAMMAD HAMID ALI KHAN, 18 A. L. J. 717; 39 M. L. Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Compromise, petition of, filed in mutation proceedings—Registration, whether necessary.

In a mutation proceeding a petition of compromise was filed reciting that the parties had effected a mutual settlement fixing the shares which each was to get in the property, and asking that the mutation of names might be effected in accordance therewith. In a suit by one of the parties to the settlement for a larger share in the property than he got under the settlement, the question was whether the petition of compromise, being unregistered, was admissible in evidence:

Held, per Kanhaiya Lal, J., that as the object of the petition was directly to obtain mutation in a particular manner and not to declare any rights, it was admissible in evidence for determining whether such a settlement as was set out therein had taken place, and that, even if registration was necessary, the petition would, nevertheless, be admissible in evidence as collateral evidence of the agreement, though it might not operate to effectuate a valid transfer of rights.

Per Piggott, J.—As the petition of compromise contained an authoritative admission by each party as against the other of the title of the other party to whatever share had been agreed upon amongst them, the petition was a document purporting to

Defendant sold certain property to plaintiff. At the same time the latter executed an unregistered agreement to reconvey the property to the defendant after five years. Defendant continued in possession of the property under a rent-note. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover possession of the property:

Held, (1) that under the circumstances, it could not be said that there had been misrepresentation by the plaintiff:

(2) that the agreement to reconvey, being unregistered, could not be admitted in evidence.

Where the question is whether a sale-deed and an agreement to reconvey make together a mortgage by conditional sale, the Court must look to the actual contents of the documents and construe them accordingly. But it may be that there is such extrinsic evidence and circumstances which show the relation of the written language to existing facts and the Court might be able to come to the conclusion that the documents which on the face of them constitute a sale, and an agreement to reconvey within a certain period or after a certain period, amount to a mortgage. B NAMDEV SATVASHET v. DHONDU SADASHIV, 22 BOM. In a suit to recover property which had fallen to the plaintiff's share on partition, the plaintiff sought to put in evidence four receipts signed by himself and his three brothers, in which they acknowledged having accepted certain portions detailed in the respective receipts of the family property:

Held, (1) that taken together and read as a whole the receipts constituted an instrument of partition and not being registered, were inadmissible in evidence;

(2) that taken merely as lists of property which had fallen to each brother's share, they did not by themselves prove the fact of partition;

(3) that in either case partition was not established and plaintiff's suit must be dismissed. B NILKANTH BHIMAJI SINDE v. HANMANT EKNATH SINDE, 22 BOM. L. R 992; 44 B 881 415

Where the true owner of land, having the opportunity to acquaint himself with all the facts and the law, and not being led into any error by the fraud of a party, sees that party openly enjoying the land and claiming it as owner, the true owner cannot, in order to arrest limitation, plead ignorance of the law which made him unaware of his right to possession. M SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. BOMMADEVARA VENKATANARASIMHA, 11 L. Sale of goods—Due date of performance falling on Sunday—Trade usage entitling performance of contract on the day following, whether can be proved.

In the absence of statutory provision or trade custom or usage to that effect, the fact that the performance of a contract falls due on a holiday does not alter the rights of the parties by suspending the transaction of private business.

Mercantile usage, though it needs not either the antiquity, the uniformity or the notoriety of custom for its enforcement, must be so well-known and acquiesced in that it may be reasonably presumed to have been an ingredient tacitly imported by the parties into their contract.

The usage of which evidence is received must not be repugnant to or inconsistent with the written contract.

But in order that the material incident which it is sought to annex should fall within the exception of repugnancy, the incident must be such as, if expressed in the written contract, would make it insensible or inconsistent or thoroughly unreasonable.

If the due date of performing a written contract falls on a Sunday, the party to the contract who alleges the existence of a trade usage under which he is entitled to perform the contract on the day following the Sunday, must not only prove the existence of the trade usage but also establish that the usage, when read into the written contract, does not make it insensible or inconsistent. C KASIRAM v. HURNUNDROY, 32 C. Unlike the Evidence Act, the Stamp Act does not base its rules on theories of relevancy or of public policy. It is purely fiscal and insists that certain documents shall pay a contribution to the State according to the purpose for which they were executed. In regard to certain documents which create a right to money it prescribes that unless the stamp is proportionate to the valuation of the claim the document shall be inadmissible in evidence, and where the intention of the parties is that the valuation shall be unlimited it enacts by section 26 that the claimant will be entitled to realise a sum proportionate to the stamp fee paid, subject to certain exceptions in the case of royalties on coal. It follows that wherever the claim exceeds the amount proportionate to the stamp the document is not duly stamped for the purpose for which it was executed within the meaning of section 35 of the Stamp Act, and the provisions of the section would apply thereto.

There is nothing in the words of section 35 of the Stamp Act which necessarily excludes its operation from cases covered by section 26 of the Act.

Where a mining lease bears a stamp of a certain value, the lessor's right to recover royalty is not confined to the amount covered by the stamp; if it is found that he is entitled to a greater amount he can be given a decree for the sum to which he is entitled on compliance with the provisions of section 35 of the Stamp Act. Pat. BRAJ MOHAN SINGH v. LACHMI NARAIN, (1920) PAT. 283; 5 P. Under section 50 of the Succession Act it is sufficient for a valid attestation of a Will that the witnesses had a clear view of the testator when he was in the act of signing: it is not necessary for a witness to actually see the fingers of the testator move as the signature is made.

Inasmuch as initials operate as a signature, the mere fact that a testator affixes only his initials to a Will would not render the Will invalid if there is a proper attestation of the initials.

The mere fact that a Will contains pious reflections as to the authority of the Deity in worldly affairs and the submission of the creature, would not render the effect of the Will invalid. O SHER MUHAMMAD KHAN v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, BAHRAICH, 7 O. L. J. 406 134

——— s. 111, applicability of—Hindu Law—Will—Alternative bequests, validity of—Defeasance of estate—Testator, power of.

Section 111 of the Succession Act contains merely a rule of construction, and is subject to any provision in a Will which may rebut its application. The intention of the rule is, that, when there is a gift followed by a contingent gift over, the inclination of the Court is to interfere as little as possible with the first gift, the second gift being read as a gift in substitution and not in remainder, where, therefore, the expressed intention of a testator is to create a life-estate, the provisions of the section cannot be invoked to convert that estate into an absolute estate. The section is applicable only where the time of the occurrence of an event is left uncertain,—as, where a contingent gift is made to depend upon the death of the legatee.

Where a Hindu makes a bequest in favour of his widow, and on her death a gift to his daughter for life, and after that an alternative gift, on the one hand to her male issue, if any, and, on the other hand, in default of male issue, to a charity, the bequest to the male issue is void, but not the alternative bequest to charity.

A Hindu testator is competent to provide for the defeasance of a prior absolute estate contingently on the happening of a future event,—as where a life-estate is bequeathed to a widow with power of disposition during her lifetime, and after her to her daughter, and neither of them exercises that power. B ADVOCATE-GENERAL OF BOMBAY v. VITHALDAS MEGHJI, 2 BOM. Where, however, the mortgagee enters into possession not as mortgagee but as lessee of the mortgaged property, he cannot, as a rule, be charged as a mortgagee in possession. But when the effect of the lease is that the whole of the rent is utilised towards the reduction of the mortgage-debt, the position is different and the mortgagee is chargeable as a mortgagee in possession.

Again a prior mortgagee taking a lease subsequent to the puisne mortgage ought to be charged as a mortgagee in possession.

Therefore, where a prior mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property under a lease subsequent to the puisne mortgage fails to pay the Government revenue and the property is sold for default of payment and is purchased by the prior mortgagee himself, the purchase is subject to the puisne mortgage. Pat KISHUNDAYAL BHAGAT v. ——— s. 108—Landlord and tenant—Possession not delivered to tenant—Rent, suit for, whether maintainable—Joint tenancy—Apportionment of rent—Co-sharer tenants, whether necessary parties.

It is a well-recognised principle that governs the relationship between landlords and tenants that the delivery of possession by the lessor is a condition necessary for the maintenance of an action for rent. That principle applies to all kinds of leases, agricultural and non-agricultural

A landlord is not entitled, in a suit to which all the co-sharer tenants of a joint holding are not parties, to apportion the rent among the several joint tenants. Pat UDHAB CHANDRA SINGH v. NARAIN MANJHI 186

——— s. 123—Gift—Registered deed, whether indispensable Consent to make gift, whether sufficient to vest property in donee.

Under section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, a registered conveyance is an essential requisite of a valid gift of immoveable property. Mere consent to make such a gift is not sufficient to vest the property in the donee. B KUVERJI KAVASJI v. MUNICIPALITY OF LONAVALA, 22 BOM. L. R. 654 403

Trust, creation of, by Will—Vagueness—Committee of management limited by author to descendants—Court, whether can appoint strangers to committee.

Where by a Will a wakf is created, the objects of the charity and the property in respect of which the wakf is created are specified and there is a direction as to the mode in which the wakf property is to be managed and applied, the Will creates a trust which is not bad for vagueness, merely because the committee is given all sorts of powers regarding the management of the properties.

Where in a Will creating a trust and nominating a committee for the management thereof, the testator directs that no one other than a descendant of his is to be a member of the committee, and none of his descendants is available, or a sufficient number of them cannot be obtained, to serve on the committee, the Court has power to add strangers to the committee. A JAI NARAIN v. U. P. Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912), ss. 17, 18—Claim put in late, when extinguished - Collector, duty of.

The provisions of sections 17 and 18 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act protect the Court of Wards against having claims which may be dishonest claims rushed upon them at a late period. But the provisions of these sections are not intended to bar persons who have made an honest mistake and have preferred their claims late.

The interpretation of section 18 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act is that when a claimant puts in a claim late the Collector should write to him and ask why he did not put in his claim within the right time and what was the cause of his failure. If the claimant is unable to satisfy the Collector by showing sufficient cause for his failure to put in his claim within the right time then and then only is the claim held to be extinguished. O KETKI v MANAGER, NANPARA ESTATE, 7 O. The owner or occupier of a house who knowingly keeps an illicit supply of cocaine on the premises renders himself liable to punishment under section 60A of the United Provinces Excise (Amendment) Act, 1919, and no burden is laid on the prosecution of proving that the said illicit supply had been kept there for any length of time, or that the premises had been used for this purpose on previous occasions. The mere discovery of a phial of illicit cocaine, however, on certain premises affords only a slender basis for the inference that the owner of such premises, not himself residing there, knew or had reason to believe that the resident or residents of the house were breaking the law in this matter. A DURGA v. U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 233 (k)—Partition, imperfect—Suit by party to partition for declaration that land allotted to defendant belongs to him, maintainability of.

Defendant sold certain land to a vendee. Plaintiff pre-empted the sale, obtained a decree, paid the purchase-money and was put into possession of the property but he failed to get mutation of names effected in his own favour. Subsequently, both parties applied for imperfect partition of their recorded shares. The partition was accordingly effected and the property in dispute was allotted to the defendant, in whose name it stood. Plaintiff applied for correction of the records, but his application was rejected. He then brought a suit for a declaration that the property in dispute belonged to him and that it had been wrongly allotted to the defendant:

Held, that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 233 (k) of the U. P. L and Revenue Act. A BHUPAL SINGH v. UJAGAR SINGH, 18 A. L. J. 928; 2 U. P. L. R. (A.) 306 122

He continued, however, to use the site for the purpose of storing wood, with the result that he was again prosecuted and convicted. In revision to the High Court.

Held, that on his application for a license being refused accused had a remedy by an appeal under section 318 of the U. P. Usurious Loans Act (X of 1918), s. 3 (1)—Suit on bond—Court, jurisdiction of, to consider merits of transaction—Interest, progressive increase of, whether unfair.

In a suit to recover on a bond in which the defendant does not appear, the Court has jurisdiction, under section 3 (1) of the Usurious Loans Act, to consider the merits of the transaction.

Where in such a suit the Court finds that the provision as to payment of interest is substantially unfair, the case is a fit one in which the transaction between the parties may be re-opened, and relief given in respect of excessive interest.

Where interest on the whole sum borrowed continues at the rate fixed, though the principal is being progressively discharged by instalments, the provision as to interest is altogether unconscionable and unfair and will not be enforced. B KERING RUPCHAND & Co v. BAYLEY, 22 BOM. Valuation of suit—Partition, suit for—Value for purposes of jurisdiction—Court fees payable—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv), Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi).

In a suit for partition for the purpose of jurisdiction the value of the suit is not that of the entire property but only of the share of the plaintiff in the said property.

In a suit for partition, pure and simple, where the plaintiff is in possession of his share of the property and simply wants to alter the mode of its enjoyment by claiming to hold his proportionate share in the properties separately from the other joint holders, the Court-fee payable will be Rs. 10 only under Schedule II, Article 17, clause (vi) of the Court Fees Act.

Where the plaintiff is out of possession of his share in the joint property, he is required to pay ad valorem Court-fee under section 7, clause (iv) of the Court Fees Act, inasmuch as it is not a suit for mere partition but for a consequential relief in the shape of recovery of possession of his share in the property. In such a case the plaintiff has to pay Court-fee upon the valuation of his share in the property. Pat DUKHI SINGH v. HARIHAR SHAH, 5 P L J. 540; 1 P. L. T. 595; (1921) PAT. 89 238

wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of—Custom—Hindu widow, succession of, and power to alienate.

The wajib-ul-arz of a village recorded a family custom regulating the succession of a Hindu widow and her power of transfer in the following words: "If among the wives one has sons and the others are sonless, the latter will remain in possession of the property for their lives without a right of transfer by sale or mortgage and after their death the property will go to the son or sons of the first wife. But if none of the widows has sons, all the wives will be the owners and remain in possession of the property in equal shares with power to transfer, and after their death the next heirs will be the owners."

Held, that the foregoing provision in the wajib-ul-arz afforded clear evidence of the existence of a family custom whereby a sonless Hindu widow had a life-estate with full power of transfer during her lifetime, and that after her death whatever property may not have been alienated would go to her husband's heirs, but that if there were more widows than one the sonless widow would be allowed to remain in possession of a share for her life-time without any right of transfer, and that on her death the property would go to the son of the co-widow. 307
